These government payments, designed to encourage production of milk and butterfat, are adjusted quarterly. Present rates are 35 cents for milk and 10 cents for butterfat.

A $15 Billion Postwar Budget

The choice that the country must make regarding the amount to be spent by the federal government after the war depends upon the number of services, subsidies, aids and extras for which it will be willing to pay. There have been plenty of guesses as to the size of the annual postwar budget and they range downward from $25 billion for the soup-to-nuts seven course dinner to the blue-plate special of $15 billion. A nation that has been surfeited on the high cost of everything during the war might easily come to the conclusion that the $15 billion fare is a lot easier on the stomach and quite as nutritious, especially when it remembers that there are other bills to pay.

Breaking It Down

Let's look at a hypothetical federal budget of $15 billion and see if it does not furnish us with all the calories we need for vigorous postwar life. Here's the way it would break down:

Purposes	Amount in Billions
Interest on the public debt	6.5
The defense establishment	3.5
The care of veterans	3.5
Welfare grants to states	0.5
Independent offices and agencies	1.0
Civil departments and miscellaneous	1.0
Subtotal	$14.0
Available for debt reduction or other purposes	1.0
Total	$15.0

The estimates above are wholly within reason. The interest on our debt, for example, is a fixed charge no matter what our future expenditures are permitted to be. The costs for our postwar military machine should not be over the $3.5 estimated; the figure for the care of our veterans is based on previous experience, and the amount for civil departments assumes that the cost will be about what it was in 1940 — $800,000,000.

Using the 1941 Base

We shall have to get along on a budget of $15 billion, or less, if our postwar income payments and tax collections total only what they did in 1941. Should our income payments rise about the 1941 figures as they did in 1942, 1943 and 1944, then we can dream of the luxury of bigger public spending than is indicated in the table above, unnecessary and dangerous though this spending program may be. It cannot be repeated too often, or too emphatically, that while a large national income is an indication of general prosperity, the sure and safe way to get it is by restricted federal spending and moderate taxation rather than by huge budgets supported by heavy taxes or by inflation-creating deficits. A national income created by the processes of thrift, investment, work and venturesome planning will be tough-fibered and resilient, capable of supporting all reasonable needs of government under moderate taxation. A national income inflated to dizzy heights by extravagant government spending will have all the substantial and enduring qualities of a cloudbank.

France Pays Lend-Lease Debt

The French provisional government presented the United States government with $40,000,000 as a further installment on the accepted outstanding billings for shipments of materials made to French North and West Africa during the last two years. Leo T. Crowley is shown receiving one check from Christian Valcni of French supply council.

Berry Acreage Dropping In Oregon

The Oregon acreage of nine principal berries grown in Oregon has declined from a peak of approximately 25,000 acres in 1941 to less than 17,000 acres harvested in 1944, according to the latest statistical yearbook for small fruits grown in Oregon, just issued as extension bulletin 656.

Despite the decline in acreage, the increased price caused the value of farm marketings from these crops to reach an all-time record high of $6,673,000 last year. Labor shortages, increased costs and uncertain returns are the primary factors contributing to a decline, in the opinion of the extension economists at OSC, who are principal authors of the bulletin.

The high prices have stimulated better care and more complete harvesting so that average yields have been higher in recent years, the report shows.

Preliminary estimates of acreage harvested in 1944 show strawberries leading with approximately 6000 acres. Next are black raspberries, 2600 acres; boysenberries and youngberries 2500 acres; red raspberries 2100 acres; loganberries 1250 acres; grapes 720 acres; tame blackberries 680 acres; gooseberries 580 acres and cranberries 170 acres. Approximately 90 per cent of the acreage is in the Willamette valley.

It may be laid as an universal rule that a government which attempts more than it ought will perform less.
