Feed Situation Not So Bad

Oregon's feed grain yield prospects this year are comparatively better than those nationally for rye and barley, but are much below as to oats, according to a review of farm outlook information by the O.S.C. extension service. The combined prospect is better nationally than here.

In contrast with the short prospective national rye grain crop, production in Oregon is expected to be 45 percent greater than last year and 35 percent above average. The USDA crop reporting service estimated the national rye crop at 2.14 million bushels, about 80 percent of last year but less than one-half of the average crop. Production in Oregon was forecast at 975,000 bushels.

Substantial premiums are being offered for malting barley, and the demand for feed barley is strong. A short national crop of barley was indicated, the smallest since 1937. Oregon's barley crop is expected to be below last year although about average. The national oats crop, however, is expected to exceed even the big 1945 output, but prospects for oats in Oregon on June 1 were 10 percent under 1945 and 25 percent below average.

Carryover stocks of rye are unusually small and the wheat carryover will be the smallest for several years. At mid-June wheat production was estimated at one billion 33 million bushels, however, the third largest crop of record. Thus far in June winter wheat has improved enough to more than offset deterioration in spring wheat.

In Pacific northwest states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, as of June 1 wheat production was expected to reach 128 million bushels. That would be 11 percent greater than last year and 31 percent above average.

REDDY, THE INDUSTRIAL WORKER, IS GROWING FAST. Today, Pacific Power and Light is delivering four times as much power to industries as it did ten short years ago in 1936. This has been a steady, year-by-year growth—right along with industry itself.

In the past twelve months alone, 84 new job-producing industries have been added to the long list of progressive enterprises that plan their growth with power from Pacific!

This remarkable growth in industrial power use during the past ten years reflects the healthy progress of business and industry throughout the great region which PP&L has been helping develop since 1910. It means more jobs, broader markets, and benefit to all who, like PP&L, have a stake in the welfare and progress of the area.

TO HELP KEEP THIS REGION GOING AHEAD INDUSTRIALLY . . . PP&L HAS 3-POINT-PROGRAM

1. RESEARCH ADVISORY SERVICE . . . a valuable new service recently introduced here by PP&L to help its customers solve production and marketing problems. The facilities and knowledge of 900 participating laboratories are available without charge to PP&L customers.

2. NATIONAL ADVERTISING . . . By direct mail to the nation's business and industrial leaders and through attention-getting advertisements in national magazines of wide circulation, PP&L has been telling the story of the advantages this region has to offer new industries.

3. ON THE SPOT DATA . . . Ready with accurate and detailed facts on raw materials, markets, transportation, plant sites and power supply are PP&L's industrial engineers, who keep closely in touch with every new development.
