During the past year 638 new business houses sprang up in the area served by Pacific Power & Light.

That's a lot of grocery stores, beauty parlors, service stations, restaurants and other service institutions.

But such commercial growth isn't surprising when you consider that during the same period, in the same region, PP&L also connected up 84 new industries, and more than 3,000 new homes.

Whatever way you look at it, this great Northwest region is going ahead—fast.

In this development it is PP&L's job to supply an abundance of low-cost power. And that is what we are doing.

Today PP&L is delivering 64% more power than in 1940, and the average price it receives has dropped 27%.
