The 326 veteran's families of approximately 1000 persons to be living in the new Adair Village seven miles north of Corvallis after January 1, will be encouraged and helped in setting up their own local government and a social and recreational program, college officials have expressed. Buildings turned over to the college include a recreation hall and a red cross building which has a meeting hall suitable for entertainment or religious purposes. These were formerly used by patients at the Camp Adair hospital, later known as Corvallis Naval hospital.
