And Here's How To Cook the National Holiday Bird

If you're one of many impatient housewives, who'll be testing a roasting turkey Thanksgiving morning by stabbing it from time to time with a fork to see if it's cooked to a turn—take the word from a specialist, you're doing wrong. That old housewife custom of pricking the skin of a cooking turkey with a fork's tines is not a reliable test and it allows savory juices to escape. The OSC extension nutrition specialist, Miss Agnes Kolshorn, says a much better test is to press the thickest part of a drumstick between the fingers, being careful to protect the hand with a cloth or paper. The bird is done, she adds, when the meat is soft to the touch.

A second test to use on the cooking turkey is to move a drumstick up and down with the fingers. If the joint moves or breaks readily, the bird is ready for the Thanksgiving table.

Correct turkey roasting technique, according to Miss Kolshorn, involves slow cooking with dry heat. For birds that weigh up to 14 pounds, a roasting time of three and one-half to four hours is recommended at an over temperature of 300 degrees. Larger birds will require up to six hours to roast at the same oven heat.

A home-handy to remember in preparing dressing, Miss Kolshorn points out, is one cup of dressing to each pound of turkey. Do not stuff the bird tightly, as the dressing will expand in cooking she adds. Extra dressing may be baked in a separate pan.

Trussing the bird by tying wing tips back and securing legs snugly against the tail will improve the appearance of the cooked bird. Using melted fat spread by an open-textured cloth, one may see that the bird is thoroughly greased just prior to being put into the oven. Greasing holds moisture inside the turkey and aids in obtaining a uniform brown appearance. Trusses may be cut after the bird has cooked an hour. Avoid dry breast meat by cooking the turkey on first one side, then the other, and finish roasting by turning the bird breast up, are other suggestions.

Why Conservation of Electricity Is Necessary Now!

Cooperation of Entire Pacific Northwest Needed to Solve Problem of Electric Power Shortage During Winter Season

Power demands of the Pacific Northwest have grown to the point where it is necessary to ask all users of electricity to cooperate in conservation measures. Already this winter, power demands are equalling the full capacity of the region's pooled electric generating resources.

From now on, throughout this winter season, conservation of electricity by ALL users will be necessary during the daily peak hours of 4:30 to 6:30 p.m.

ALL electric utilities of the entire Pacific Northwest are actively working together to help meet the common problem—pooling their output of power and coordinating the operation of their systems. But they can't do the whole job alone! Your cooperation and help are needed, to make the available kilowatts go around!

No area—no home or business or industry—in the whole Pacific Northwest is immune to the shortage. The entire area has experienced a phenomenal growth in new homes, new industries, and expanded business. Shortages of materials caused by the war have made it impossible to keep pace with the growing demand for more and more electric service.

TO KEEP JOBS GOING... KEEP PROSPERITY GROWING MAKE EVERY KILOWATT COUNT!

- IN THE HOME
Between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m. reduce all electricity used for heating to an absolute minimum. In so far as possible, serve oven meals prepared in advance of 4:30 p.m. and confine surface cooking to the fewest possible units; wash dishes and bathe after 6:30 p.m.; restrict washing and ironing to the morning or after 6:30 p.m.; turn off all lights not actually needed between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m.
- IN THE BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENT
Turn off or reduce to a minimum all window display and ornamental lighting between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m. Reduce air conditioning and refrigeration between these hours. Reduce use of electrically operated equipment. Cut use of outdoor and indoor electric signs and lighting to a minimum between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m.
- IN THE INDUSTRIAL PLANT
Between 4:30 and 6:30 p.m. reduce use of electrically operated machinery and equipment to a minimum; eliminate all ornamental and less essential lighting.
