CANS OREGON-GROWN PRODUCTS. Visiting the Rogue River Valley in 1916, Ralph E. Koozer saw possibilities in the small Bagley Canning Co. He interested three partners and bought it. Since then he has managed this growing Ashland industry, which was consolidated with another cannery in 1924 and incorporated in 1927. Ownership now is shared by 100 Ashland area people. Approximately 3000 tons of Oregon tomatoes, 1000 tons each of pears and peaches and 500 tons of apples are canned each year and sold under both company and buyer labels. For the needs of this progressive firm, Koozer uses the services of the First National's Ashland Branch.

Building Oregon Together...

Oregon's growth and prosperity are based on the individual endeavors of her people. The persons shown here are engaged in the diverse fields of canning, auctioneering and newspaper publishing. Yet, as each progresses, more business is created for the products and services of the other two—and for thousands of other Oregon firms. Thus opportunities are built for each of us—and Oregon grows, family by family, farm by farm and business by business. On their part, banks in the First National Group help speed Oregon's progress by making constructive banking services widely available. Tell us how we can help you.

FAMILY "SELLS" SALESMANSHIP. In a year The Dalles Auction Yard sells more than 20,000 head each of cattle and hogs for Pacific Northwest breeders. Large groups of buyers—meat packers and cattle "feeders"—attend the sales, bidding by secret signals. It is a thriving Oregon commission service, built since 1937 by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wink (seated) and their sons, Donald D. (left) and Bernard F. "First National at The Dalles helped us grow," Wink says, recalling that first year sales totaled less than a single auction today. The Winks now also have an auxiliary sales yard in Central Oregon.

PRINTERS BECOME PUBLISHERS. Two former Wyoming printers, Arthur E. Macoubrie and William L. Dudley, who had a yen to own a newspaper, have realized their dream in Oregon. Since 1946 they have been publishers of The New Era, a Sweet Home weekly. It also has subscribers in Holley, Crawfordville and Foster. Macoubrie and Dudley were "back shop" men on the Casper, Wyo., Tribune-Herald, so they hired experienced reporter Walter Snyder as editor. With assistance from the Bank of Sweet Home, member of the First National Group, the publishers have improved their shop and equipment to give better news service to their growing community.
