Sherman County Fair Sept. 14-16

Men with a mouthful or their own teeth can remember livery barns, and buggies and a fancy cutter, and eight horse teams with bells clanging up the grade with wheels grinding on the rocks, the water bucket swinging drunkenly under the lead wagon, the driver riding the load and wishing he were on a saddle wheeler as he used to be.

Fifty years ago when Moro looked like the above women were long skirts that trailed in the dusty roads and several petticoats and high collars until grand daughter might wonder these days if grandma didn't yield a lot of sweat just to be fashionable.

They were the same sort of people as now only they wore more clothes and whiskers, smoked their tobacco stronger (the men), didn't have to put water in their whiskey. They'll be standing in the shade at the fair telling one another the oft told yarns of another day while their grandsons will be recounting last fall's football games. And for the same reason and with the same enthusiasm and enjoyment.

At fair time they come from all over, these oldsters who lived and loved in our home county years ago, they look at the fat beef and watch the club kids with a wandering eye, but they light up at the face of a friend. The fair is the place to meet them and the place to be met by them.

A fair is a meeting place; that is what it originally was, a meeting place where men with goods to sell met those with money to buy or goods to trade. Nowadays it is many other things but still a meeting place where those with reminiscences to exchange can always find a trade.

Because everyone likes to remember things of the past, which is the base on which things of the future grow, a gathering of people so cosmopolitan as a county fair is a fine place to meet people not often seen.

"Yea, old Joe, remember the time we was both sewin' sacks for Shull and" . . . which will serve to recall the days of big crews with a spirit of cohesion seldom encountered in any other place. A good harvest crew be-

Nostalgia gets us all in the end.

People usually look in the only direction they can, thus the young look ahead because they have no past and the old look backward because they have no future.

Most of us, however, have some of both and many a high school senior is given to talk of the days when he was a freshman.

came a unit, ready to bet its wages or to fight for recognition of its superiority at putting out the most sacks, working later or blowing the whistle earlier than anyone else within hearing.

The world moves very fast and has been moving fast for a long time. Long enough so that a man need not be greybearded to remember a way of life entirely different from that of today.
