We're stretching our available supply of metals and other critical materials by every means science can devise.

MORE STRENGTH FOR OUR NATION

How we're saving the materials our country needs for defense

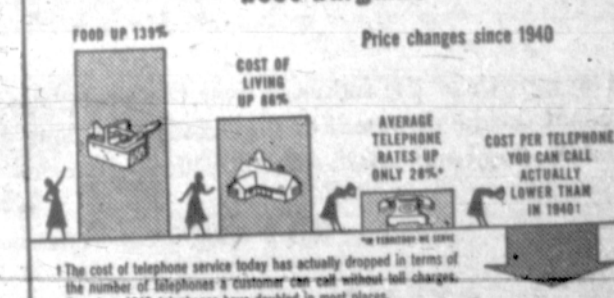

1. Copper for cables and wires...rubber for insulation...aluminum for dials—the telephone system requires vast amounts of the materials which are also badly needed by other defense products. Naturally, since the telephone is such an important military and production tool, we get a quota of these materials. But to keep building a strong communications system, we must conserve in every way we can.

2. Scientists are at work on this task...in telephone laboratories and manufacturing plants. By substituting other materials for critical ones, by discovering ways to use smaller amounts of the shortage items, they've come up with some amazing savings. It's estimated that, in 1951, the Bell System will save 2,700,000 pounds of rubber, 3,250,000 pounds of copper, 210,000 pounds of aluminum—to name just three.

3. Efficient telephone service, the kind that can pitch in and help all the nation in times of need, is the result of just such little things as using steel instead of aluminum in a telephone dial. It's the result, also, of keeping the telephone system financially strong. Over the years, such financial strength has been the foundation of our ability to serve. It has enabled us to produce telephone service that's better than ever, produce more of it than ever, and sell it at prices which have gone up far less than other things.

Your telephone is one of today's best bargains

*The cost of telephone service today has actually dropped in terms of the number of telephone calls a customer can call without toll charges. For, since 1940, telephones have doubled in most places.
