

Highway Jobs Call for Immense Excavation

If 1,456,000 cubic yards of its face were gouged out of "The Cathedral," a huge mass of rock on the John Day Highway, that hole would equal the excavation called for in just three highway construction contracts awarded by the Oregon Highway Commission in January 1952. The 15-story Meier & Frank block, the New Oregonian Building and the new State Office Building are three of the largest business blocks in Portland. All three together contain 696,446 cubic yards. To fill the hole in The Cathedral would take all three piled up in two piles, with the Oregonian and Office Buildings themselves also piled alongside, plus 18,449 more cubic yards. Just one month in the 1952 highway construction program which calls for 15,564,000 cubic yards of excavation!

"Why shouldn't you haul the other fellow's oil?"

One of the things people ask about Standard is why we do not let other oil companies use all of our tankers, marine terminals, and pipelines. They say, "Why shouldn't you haul the other fellow's oil?"

The answer to that question is that we're mighty busy hauling our own, meeting our regular obligations to our customers. Standard just can't share all of its transportation equipment with other companies. And it's unfair to ask us to do it. It's like asking you to let everybody else use your car.

You go out and buy a car for yourself and your family—a car big enough for your needs. So with Standard. We provide whatever facilities it takes to handle our crude oil and keep delivering our finished products where and when they're needed, to customers who depend on us for service.

Now suppose you're driving your car and a hitchhiker thumbs a ride. You pick him up only if you want to. The choice is yours. So again with Standard. In our pipelines within a state, crossing only privately-owned land, and in our tankers, we may choose to carry only our own oil.

But the way some people seem to want it, our freedom of choice would be gone. It's as if you were to be forced to stop and pick up everybody who lifted a thumb at us. We'd be required to carry anybody's oil in these tankers and pipelines, even if our own had to be set aside.

In time, if your car were taken over like that, you'd have to buy another for your own use. Once again, so with Standard. If we were forced to carry competitors' oil, we'd have to buy or build additional facilities to handle our own. Result: increased costs to us, higher prices to you.

When they're needed for national defense, Standard makes its private facilities available for public use. But we can't do it as a general rule. We would lose our efficiency—a loss to you, our customers, as well as ourselves. We don't believe you want it that way.
