PRICES HIGH FOR FEED GRAINS AND HAY

Strong markets for oats and barley, steady prices for hay and wheat, abundant supplies of seeds and bright prospects for pastures are seen for this year's fall-planted crops.

Feed grains and forage are likely to stay close to the top of the "most wanted" list in 1953, Economist M. D. Thomas points out a new publication, but the situation may be different in other places where big supplies and prospects for large carry-overs weigh heavily on next year's market.

While the national wheat picture remains about the same, a bumper 1953 crop might make it necessary to put on the production brakes, Thomas concludes. "Planting less wheat this year and more feed grains could help postpone the day of reckoning that seems in store for wheat," is the way he views the wheat outlook.
