Milton Branch, riding here with his two daughters, was the northwest winner of the "Grassman of the Year" contest in Idaho, Washington and Oregon. He lives at Midvale, Idaho and started with a poor half section which he has expanded into an 8000 acre grass ranch by careful selection and seeding of proper type grasses. He won a trophy and a $1000 irrigation system. Rube Long, Oregon and W. F. Larsen, Washington

SMALL TOWNS
Small towns do not seem to be popular. The calm and quietness of them offering insufficient competition to the excitement of cities; their dark and silent streets having less interest than the garish brightness of larger towns.

When we have a wedding every one knows the bride and is happy with her; a funeral brings sincere regret for the deceased had a place in the lives of everyone. We share the lives of others and they share ours and all are enriched thereby. We are people, individuals, we are not merely customers, acquaintances, prospects.

There are opportunities in small towns, probably the best there are anywhere. Small towns can us doctors, dentists, beauticians, mechanics, businessmen of all kinds. The rewards are not so startling as in larger towns but the success is more assured. If one is a good individual he can do all right in a small town and the competition seldom presses him out of shape as it sometimes does in the city.

We small towners are individuals; we live our own lives. Perhaps the decline of individualism comes from the movement to the cities. In cities people are cogs in vast machines, units of demand and production, figures in statistics; in small towns people are individuals. And we like to be individuals.

FEW THINGS PERFECT
The football squad has finished its season except for a post-season scrimmage or two and the memories that will always be a part of it. The boys won all their games but one and that the last one, and the one they wanted to win most.

They had a good season, winning all games but one and often by comfortable scores. The players got some good training out of the game and the effort to get to play. Some who didn't try hard enough missed some games. It will be that way all through life. It is entirely possible that more is learned by losing than by winning although a mixture of the two is better than too much of either. The boys were not discouraged by their defeat by Union last year and were determined to win in 1954. They will not be discouraged by losing again and eventually will learn to combat the play of the Comiskey coached team.
