SOIL BANK

Wheat farmers learned last week of a gimmick in the regulations that permits them to put land in barley and draw a payment under the acreage reserve section of the soil bank law. How many are going to do so is not known but so far the number is not great.

The department of agriculture has always had difficulty in making nation-wide regulations that are fair to summerfallow sections and annual cropping sections. The fact that summerfallow farmers occasionally go to annual cropping when profitable complicates the matter. It is another example of the lack of wisdom in letting farm planning be done in Washington.

Probably no great danger will come from the regulation that permits the growing of barley on soil bank land. It will reduce the production of wheat and increase the production of barley. It may be that if we get a big surplus of barley someone will go to feeding it and thus produce more of the livestock we use in the northwest. It will be remembered that northwest farmers do not raise enough cattle, hogs or poultry to support the population of the area. The wheat business is so profitable they do not choose to do the extra work, make the necessary investment or pay the extra taxes.

Wheat growers know they are living in a false economy that will not last very long and the wiser ones are taking full advantage of it, hoping to be retired before it ends. Some are convinced they could not exist without it. One thing seems certain: that when farmers look back on the past 16 years of big rains and big prices they will consider it the golden age of Pacific Northwest wheat raising.

SMITH AND HOLMES

Some Democrats are trying to make something of the voting record of Elmo Smith when he was a state senator. They are making a great mistake.

Smith represented three big eastern Oregon counties and did it so well that he was re-elected easily. He voted like his constituents wanted him to. As senator he was senator from Grant, Malheur and Harney; as governor he is governor of all Oregon. Let no one presume that the responsibilities are the same.

Smith is a direct, plain spoken man, the kind eastern Oregonians like and respect. They know where he stands and he will do the best he can do. He was an effective senator especially in the field of highways and was elected president of the senate with little opposition, indicative of his standing among his fellows.

Mr. Holmes, who won over the publically withdrawn Lew Wallace, by a close margin, should never engage in an argument over senatorial effectiveness with Mr. Smith. He is a radio announcer whose business it is to talk. When he has stated his view of a case he is ready for another broadcast. Doing something about it is outside his training or nature. He is a talker.

He was going to settle the teacher problems all in one mighty bill after the district reorganization bill was defeated and was awarded an honor from the teachers for his stated intent. The bill never appeared, but Mr. Holmes talked about it.

Mr. Smith voted against some bills that Mr. Holmes voted for. If that be treason make the most of it. Mr. Smith does not think like Mr. Holmes, so what. Mr. Smith is a decisive, active personality; Mr. Holmes is a talkative type.
