Christmas Tree Care Adds To Usefulness

Water is still the Christmas tree's best friend, keeping it fresh and green through the Yule season and guarding against it becoming a serious fire hazard, says Charles Ross, Oregon State college farm forestry specialist.

Tests with chemicals and other special treatment for Christmas trees in the home appear no better method than standing the tree in plenty of water, Ross says.

The Christmas holiday season gives fire added chances to strike the home, Ross reminds. Typical hazards include short circuits, lighted candles, sparks from the hearth fires and matches or cigarettes on flammable decorations, paper or trash.

A Christmas tree can be highly flammable with the risk increasing as the tree stands indoors for some time. When the dry, fire-prone needles start falling, it is time to discard the tree, Ross emphasizes.

The extension worker offers the following suggestions for keeping Christmas trees fire-safe and fresh:

1. Obtain a fresh tree and store it outdoors until ready for use.

2. Set the tree in a stand having a container that will hold at least a gallon of water. Too often the container does not hold enough water.

3. Add to the water, a little anti-septic or household germicide, such as chlorox to keep organisms from forming a scum on the butt end of the tree. This scum cuts down the amount of water the tree can "drink."

4. Before placing the tree in water, make a new diagonal cut on the stem at least one inch above the old cut. This exposes a fresh, moist surface to absorb water.

5. Stand the tree in water at once and keep water level above the cut surface at all times.

6. Start the above treatment immediately. This can be done outdoors in a bucket of water if the tree is not brought into the house at once.

Ross also suggests the following precautions against Christmas home fires:

Try to set up the tree in a cool place in the house away from television sets, radiators, fireplace or other sources of heat. Don't place it in doorways or in locations that block exits in case of fire.

See that wires of electric lights on the tree are in good condition and not frayed. It is best to have a switch for these lights some distance from the tree and avoid plugging and unplugging the lights beneath the tree.

Christmas is a time of peace and boundless good will. Our cordial good wishes to all.

Nothing in the world is single
All things by the law divine
When into one another mingle
Why not we with thine.
See the mountains greet high heaven
As the moonbeams greet the sea
What are all these greetings worth
If we greet not thee.
