Mysteries Preferred To Exotic Novels

by the "BOOKWORM"

We neglected to welcome Dr. Davidson to Moro in our column last week. We are glad he is here and hope we can assist him. Not that our books will make anyone sick, but since his office days are the same as the library days, he will not need to bring any of those "year old" magazines for his office.

Speaking of magazines, did you see that article in the Saturday Evening Post about "Round-up in Bloody Basin"? It says parts of Arizona are still the same as when Zane Grey wrote about them. It has been quite a time since I read any of Zane Grey. The library has 23 of his books. How many of them have you read?

Seems a new angle is for the widow to write her story. Like the two the Post is running, one by Melissa Ambros and the other by Eleanor Roosevelt. Brings to mind "To Live Again" by Catherine Marshall, which is in the library. In many ways these books beat this new fangled fiction and maybe just as true to life as this newest rage "Peyton Place". The library has not received this latter book as no one has donated it and the board has decided not to spend library money for it.

For some of the other tried and well known authors there is an Agatha Christie or an S. S. van Dine hair-raising murder for just good entertainment reading. Or how about a little travel with Halliburton or Stewart Holbrook? Just because they may be numbered as non-fiction doesn't mean many of them don't read like a good fast moving novel. Many very interesting books are on the non-fiction shelves such as Fred Allen's "Much Ado About Me", "Yankee Hobo in the Orient" and "Burma Surgeon". Don't over look the non-fiction section.

The kids practically eat up Nancy Drew and Carolyn Keene mysteries. Some of the juvenile books, particularly cowboy, dog and horse stories come in and out so fast the librarian hardly has time to get them on the shelf before they are back on the desk to be checked out again.

How Standard's busy transportation system helps hold down prices of petroleum products

Twenty-six Standard Tankers—plus others that we charter—sail the seas to keep crude oil moving to refineries and more than a hundred finished products returning to customers. A supertanker, carries a crew of 40 to 50, can hold enough gasoline to run your car over 10,000 years. On inland waters, tugs, barges and smaller tankers take over the transport job.

Rivers of crude oil and finished products flow through 3364 miles of pipelines that Standard operates in the Western hemisphere. In addition, we pay to send products through pipelines owned by other companies. They in turn use our lines. Through these "steel arteries," oil is pumped over mountains, as high as 9500 feet, under rivers and through deserts.

Miles of leased railroad cars, thousands of trucks, trailers, and semi-tank trucks move our finished products to distribution points, service stations, airports, marine stations, farms, factories and military installations. Standard either operates or leases nearly every form of transportation to keep vital oil supplies moving.

What's today's biggest travel bargain?—petroleum's journey from well to refinery to you, a trip that often covers thousands of miles by land, water and underground. To keep the "fare" low, Standard serves the Western hemisphere with an intricate network of tankers, trucks, tank cars and pipelines.

They move oil in huge quantities carefully scheduled to match production at the well, refining capacity and our customers' needs. This far-flung transportation job is done at a cost so low it amounts to a fraction of the price per gallon—generally less than you pay to mail a postcard.

It's one way we work to keep down the price of the gasoline you buy.
