County Agricultural Agents
Budget time has arrived for various groups and organizations including producer commodity commissions. The Oregon Wheat Commission budget for the 1960-61 year has been prepared and as per law a public hearing has been set for 1:30-3:30 p. m., Tuesday, May 17, Pendleton Armory.

A copy of this proposed budget is available for public inspection in your Sherman County Extension Agent's office. Other budgets, as prepared by your producer organizations, are likewise available for inspection.

County Agent Conference
Last week county agents from the Columbia basin counties met at Heppner for an information session on livestock practices and farm structures. Dr. J. C. Miller, head, department of animal husbandry and dairy; Dr. James Oldfield, livestock nutritionist; Mike Huber, extension ag engineer; J. Landers and Dean Frischknecht, extension specialists in animal husbandry, were on hand to bring the agents up to date on livestock problems and new research developments.

Visits were made to the Ebb Hughes and Denward Bergevin ranches. The latter farm has a very excellent 600 head feed lot setup. One day was spent on basic principals of animal nutrition, formulating rations for different classes of livestock, livestock management as influenced by nutritional requirement, a review of feed testing services at the college and an outline of assistance that agents might need to better furnish the answers to livestock problems. We hope we are now in a better position to help livestock operators with some of their questions after this review.

Livestock Field Days
The second annual beef cattle field day is scheduled to be held at OSC May 18. The Oregon Beef Cattle Improvement Association will hold its annual meeting the afternoon of May 17. The annual hog field day has been set for July 12 on OSC campus. John Hammond, Mr. Animal Husbandry of the United Kingdom and now professor emeritus of Cambridge U., will be feature speaker. The day before, July 11, the Oregon swine testing station annual meeting has been scheduled. Mr. Hammond will likewise teach a special shortcourse at WSC, June 27 to July 8. This course will deal with swine production.

Creep Feeding Cattle

Various arguments are presented as to whether to creep feed cattle. A good rule of thumb is based on what you are going to do with this animal when weaned. If creep feeding is to be done for commercial cattle with the most value obtained, these cattle should be put into your own feed yard or into a custom feed yard. In other words, these cattle are gaining good and are growthy, fleshy weaners they are finding that should go directly into the feed lot. These type cattle make the "Handy Made Cattle" that the packer buyers are getting more demand for from the supermarkets. Creep feeding is not a must for this, if done, complete feeding on the farm should then be done to turn animals while gaining fast and take full advantage of this fast gain.

Hog Cholera Eradication

Swine growers are expressing considerable interest in the development of an all-out effort to eradicate hog cholera in the United States. The National Hog Cholera committee at its annual meeting in Chicago, February 3, reaffirmed their previous recommendations for the eradication effort which included:

1. The establishment of a system for reporting the incidence and extent of loss due to hog cholera.
2. The control of movement of hog cholera infected and exposed hogs.
3. The strict enforcement of garbage cooking laws to prevent spread of hog cholera.
4. Discontinuance of field use of virulent virus. (32 states have now prohibited the use of virulent virus.)
5. Vaccination of a high percent of the nation's hogs with less dangerous vaccines until the incidence of the disease reaches a low ebb.

The swine industry has requested the USDA to hold a series of regional meetings for the industry leading to the establishment of a state hog cholera eradication committee.

Oregon Has Low Smut Loss in '59

Oregon farmers produced their cleanest wheat crop on record, according to a report from the Pacific Northwest Smut Control meeting.

In Oregon, biggest decrease in amount of smut last year was recorded in the Columbia Basin area, the report showed. Only 0.7 percent of the samples checked in this area were smutty, compared to 2.4 percent in 1958.

Greatly increased use of the smut-resistant wheat variety, Omar, was given much credit for the decrease in amount of smut. The rapid swing to Omar from the variety Elmar was the greatest change in wheat production in recent times, according to Robert L. Powelson, OSC, extension plant pathologist.

A new race of smut that attacks Omar was found in another state three years ago, but hasn't been found in Oregon wheat fields to date, Powelson added.

Dr. C. S. Holton, USDA plant pathologist stationed at Washington State University, pointed out that most samples of Omar grading smutty can be explained by the regionwide mixtures of varieties that sometimes occur. Cheatgrass smut or molds would also cause wheat samples to be graded smutty, he added.

The decline in amount of smut has also been aided by use of seed treated with the recently developed smut-killing chemical HCB said. This protects wheat against (hexachlorobenzene), Powelson said. This protects wheat against infection from both seed-borne and soil-borne smut. Mercury-type seed treatments protect against seed-borne smut only.

It is important to use seed treatment even with smut resistant wheat varieties, Powelson emphasized. This will prevent development and spread of new races of the smut fungus to which the resistant varieties might be susceptible.

Losing a resistant variety thru development and spread of a new smut race costs everybody money, Powelson pointed out. A comprehensive seed-treatment program for all wheat planted in the state is necessary to protect the investment farmers and the wheat industry have in present wheat varieties, and the still higher yielding, smut-resistant wheats being developed on Pacific Northwest experiment stations, he said.
