Gas Turbine Powered Tractor

International Harvester Company's experimental tractor has a gas turbine engine paired with a hydrostatic transmission. Skin, or body, sections are molded fiberglass.

CHICAGO — International Harvester Company has developed an experimental tractor in which a gas turbine engine is paired with a hydrostatic transmission. The body or skin is made of fiberglass. The tractor, named the HT-340, has no gear shift lever, no throttle, and no brake or clutch pedals. It uses neither cooling water nor anti-freeze, and has no transmission gears. The hydrostatic transmission depends upon oil at high pressure to transmit power by acting on the pistons of a radial hydraulic motor installed in each driving wheel. The 80-horsepower gas turbine engine, a product of Solar Aircraft Company, Harvester's San Diego subsidiary, is 21 inches long, 13 inches in diameter and weighs only 90 pounds with reduction gearing. At present, the HT-340 uses only about half of the turbine's rated horsepower since the transmission was designed to operate with a 40-horsepower piston engine.
