One of the responsibilities which parents feel most keenly is that of giving medicine to a child. To be sure, there are times when circumstances would seem to justify trying a course of treatment that worked well during a previous illness... and which seems safe enough to repeat without consulting the doctor.

At such times, parents should recognize that they probably cannot answer these fundamental questions:

- Is the child's illness the same?
- Should the dosage be the same as it was?
- Has the medicine lost its potency?

Many illnesses have symptoms in common. What may seem like a familiar and none-too-serious symptom to you, could be something else requiring an entirely different form of treatment.

Medicine given under a physician's supervision is a known remedy, prescribed for a known condition. That's why checking with your doctor is the better part of wisdom. And that's why getting prompt and proper medical care may well turn out to be one of the biggest bargains of your life.—Reprinted from a copyrighted advertisement published by Parke, Davis & Company, Detroit 32, Michigan.

A mailman certainly might assume that everyone banks at U. S. National. Part of his job is to pick up and deliver deposits for the thousands of customers who take advantage of U. S. National's handy, postage-paid bank-by-mail service. And when he visits the bank, either as a mailman or as a customer, he experiences first-hand the smiling service for which U. S. is famous. His kind of bank is U. S. National—"your kind of bank," too!
