REPUBLICAN PARTY

Owners of typewriters, including editors, columnists and politicians, have been having a try at prophesying the future of the Republican party recently. It is an intriguing subject and one that even Democrats have begun to state opinions on, even though the advice of one party to another is always considered suspect.

Let us assume that the purpose of a political party is to acquire control of the government and let us say that ethics are secondary to the acquisition of power. The pious will object but the practical will applaud.

The Democrats obtained control in 1932 because of a depression. The party entered into certain social changes called the new deal which were not necessary to obtain control but which were designed to attach some groups to the party permanently. These groups included labor, negroes and urban dwellers and some smaller ones. The new deal appealed to the weak and the lazy and those who had been scared by the depression and were more or less willing to trade the time tested American system of economy for something else, even if it be tinged with red.

The Democrats have been able to maintain control of government most of the time since 1932 by expansions of the system. You recall that we excluded ethics in this discussion.

Republicans are trying to find a formula to get back into power and have tried politicians such as Dewey, utility lawyers such as Wilkie, generals such as Eisenhower with indifferent success whether elected or defeated. It seems to many Republicans that it is best to follow the trend toward socialism and try to pick up the crumbs from the Democratic table.

We suggest that the Republicans try expousing Americanism which would mean the return to individualism, the removal of government from many activities, the expansion of opportunities for young people.

As a political concept the new deal is dead. No person of integrity believes government is responsible for the people, could be or should be. Efforts to do everything for political supporters has expanded the budget, weakened the citizen and proved that if a man wants anything of consequence he must earn it himself.

The philosophy of individualism is in agreement with all the important religions and is in conformity with the words of the better known philosophers. It should have a political sponsor.

BONNEVILLE TROUBLE

We have grown suspicious of news about Bonneville Power because it has been unreliable throughout the years, but as of now, it seems that BPA has been unable to make its payments which are inadequate in any event to recompense the government for all the money invested and the interest thereon.

That may account for the talk about a connection with California so some power could be sold there during high water and some power obtained from steam plants there is below water. It may also account for all the worry about a power treaty with Canada which seems to be waiting for a better deal and might build a big power system of its own. Certainly BPA is responsible for the building of all the dams on the Columbia river which put their constant stream of power in to the system.

But we read that Bonneville may have to raise the rates and take away from the northwest the advantage it has claimed for years. (And about which it has done little.) We fail to understand why BPA rates should not be raised. Everything else has gone up since the thirties; the government has used little discretion in expenses involved in road and railroad changes near dams; construction of both dams and lines is tremendous.

Chambers of Commerce in the northwest may lay claim to great development because of federal power but we are not impressed by that. Oregon has developed slower than the nation as a whole. The northwest has a few aluminum plants that use cheap power and little else. The argument that BPA must be protected and retained just as it has been for a quarter of a century is based on sentiment instead of reality. Let Bonneville Power stand on its own legs for a change.

LOWER LEARNING

A week or so ago an Oregon lumberman, beset by the transportation troubles that have clouded much of that industry, went back to Washington, D. C. with the intention of informing the legislators and other officials about the economic facts of life.

and thereby obtaining some relief from the burden of government that seemed certain to engulf him.

He discovered that legislators and officials in Washington, D. C. were interested in their own problems, the most important of which, is to get re-elected, which means staying with the groups with the most votes. Politics, not economics, held their attention.

The discovery is common enough and should not arouse surprise. Politicians are people. True, the ideal legislator is a servant who puts the welfare of his employer—the people—ahead of his own interest. But not many are ideal and those who are long elected are probably those who pay attention to getting elected.

"What's in it for me" as a philosophy of our present spiritual decay has not missed tainting our politicians.

We suspect that politicians will not lead the needed reform but will follow it. The voters will have to develop a better philosophy first.

GREAT DAY
 Astronaut John Glenn has made his three orbits around the earth to restore the shrinking souls of American scientists who have an inferiority complex about Russian claims of success at the same business. But Glenn's trip should help that for it was announced to the whole world and anyone with a radio could follow him, which is a marked contrast to the secrecy of the Russian's flight.

The end project, we understand, is to put a man on the moon, one that can perhaps be justified to readers of Buck Rogers. It bias fair to be a very expensive undertaking and in different economic and political conditions would be unthinkable. We may be vying for world leadership by such competition, at least there are those who say so.

Anyhow the scientists had it figured perfectly or nearly so and that must have been a nice exercise in arithmetic and allied sciences for which we congratulate late them and also John Glenn who is certainly a remarkable man to stand so much postponed and perform to perfectly.

So, now we have won a round.
