be equal in voting power. A producer is worth several pencil pushers economically and should be politically. A banker is worth more than a bum. Giving the inept, the weak, the whiners power through politics that they cannot achieve through economics will ruin the country—maybe already has.

The percentage of producers is getting smaller all the time. When they are completely submerged by the spenders, the service servants, until they are handicapped or discouraged the country will necessarily go down hill. A government that doesn't know enough to encourage the able and prod the lazy is ripe for an invasion of new ideas before the country is invaded by some smarter and more ambitious people.

ROYAL FAMILY ANYONE

The victory of the third ranking Kennedy brother in Massachusetts will occasion comment about the possible rise of a royal family in the United States, a sentiment said to be favored by the elder Mrs. Kennedy.

Well, royal families have served a purpose in the history of mankind, sometimes a good purpose and sometimes a bad. Nations had royal families for generations and centuries and made progress under some of them. If royal families were examples of integrity and honesty, upheld the best in morals, both personal and public, and not too ambitious to acquire power a nation could get along with them.

It must be said that in modern times the tendency has been to get rid of kings and adopt a form of government that gave the people authority over their fate. That idea has been found to be somewhat less than perfect, but hardly enough so that we will turn back to royal families willingly.

We doubt that the history and background of the Kennedys would permit them to qualify. Old Honey Fitz was hardly a character out of Horatio Alger nor did Teddie's record at Harvard meet the highest moral standards. We think we will have to look farther to find a royal family.

It must be said, however, that Americans do show some tendency to let someone do their governing, royal family, or federal bureaucracy, or some agency that will provide the checks for irresponsible living without worrying the citizen or asking endeavor on his part. If the attitude continues we will have to have a royal family to fill the vacuum the people will have caused by their inattention to self government.

CONSTITUTION'S BIRTHDAY

Monday was the 175th birthday of the American constitution and the date is worthy of note. In that document a group of revolutionary individuals wrote a plan for a government by people in reaction to too strict government by the minions of King George III. It is full of compromises because the members of the convention could not agree on many things; there were large colonies and small ones, rich colonies and poor ones, some with industry (such as it was) and some strictly agricultural.

But it has not been changed much on its face in 175 years. It has been amended as provided by the men who wrote it. Jefferson came home and insisted on the bill of rights which make up the first ten amendments.

However, the constitution may look like the original it has been and is being amended in spirit. Originally the men in government were dedicated men whose sole interest was in the welfare of the nation; now the men in government are more inclined to be interested in themselves or in a political party. The men of the first constitutional convention were men of integrity, men with an ideology to follow—now they are men who do what is necessary to win. The moral element has been submerged or has been talked around.

An observance of the constitution's birthday would only be important if it served to revive the philosophy that imbued the writers of that document. They believed in the value of the individual; they objected to oppressive government. The only ideal mentioned in the preamble was liberty.

Restrictions were placed on government. Certainly the writers of that document would be appalled at the authority government has taken in modern times. Maybe this has been because of the weakness of people but whatever the cause it is not in conformity with the spirit of the original constitution.

FARMER'S STRIKE

There are a lot of men, many of them farmers, who think that the only way farmers will ever get the satisfaction they desire on prices is to form an organization and strike for more money. We do not find that laboring men have become satisfied since they have unions capable of black-jacking employers, but they obtained much more money for much less work.

There is nothing wrong about farmers trying the same thing. It is an era of gangs and gamsters anyway and the farmers might as well get into the racket while it lasts. Even a little success by the first group would make it feasible to try again and the one-time independence of farmers has certainly been watered by conditions in the past 30 years.

Food prices are largely caused by the consumers themselves who insist on so much packaging and service with their food purchases. Labor costs are a big factor also. Farmers will have to decide whether they are opposing that trend or are trying to make consumers pay more.

Anyone can live cheaply if she wishes to buy simple foods and do the preparation in her own kitchen. A farm strike could simplify our living.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Since the U. S. Supreme Court made its erroneous decision that legislative apportionment in the states was part of the business of the federal government there has been increased activity in cities trying to get more political power. It appears they will succeed.

There is no reason why states should not be apportioned the same as the federal government except that cities demand more power.

The plan is that one man's vote should be as big as another. And that is a crock of idiocy. Men are not equal about anything else and there's no reason why they should

People's Column

To the Editor:
 This past week the residents of this county saw many first places awarded and blue ribbons distributed accordingly.

However, there is a product that Sherman County is noted for which too rarely receives the acclaim it deserves. Because of the nature of this commodity it could hardly receive a blue ribbon at a fair, but that is its call—Blue Ribbon.

To some people in this day of space flights and atoms, the simple words, friendship and hospitality, may seem dull and out of date.

To my parents, though, on their recent visit these two words with the Sherman County flair really made their stay a time to be remembered.

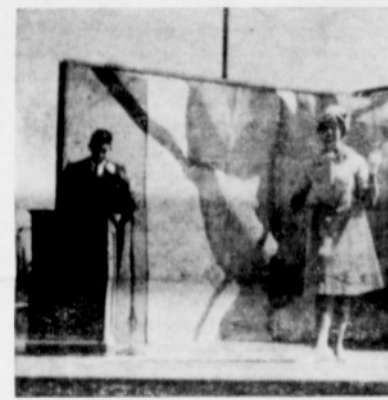

The dinners, lunches and special visits pleased them so very much that my sister and I felt we would like to let you know how happy you had made two ex-residents.

There last comments were, "Everyone was so nice, so friendly."

Cattle Grubs Can Be Killed; Time To Act Is Now

Cattle grubs cost Oregon beef producers a great deal of money each year—both in terms of lost pounds during the fly season in the summer as well as damage to carcasses that occur during the winter period. These carcasses go to slaughter and it is frequently necessary to carve away some of the high priced cuts. One other major factor is that a great deal of the hide is worthless to the leather industry due to the holes that have been cut in it in the life process of the cattle grub.

Materials are now on the market that can be used as a spray, a pour-on, as well as internal treatment. These organic phosphates are very effective if applied properly. Treatment may be any time between now and the first of November. If cattle are to be sprayed, it is advisable to do it as soon as they are available as it will take less material to wet the hide now than it will later when the cattle have obtained their winter coat.

WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

It is written that Satan was cast out. He remains Satan forevermore, through all eternity. There is not, so far as it is written, any possibility of Satan, the evil one, ever making a deal, or somehow, becoming caste in the role of a misunderstood character.

... This is the Christian belief in evaluating between the forces of good and evil. And perhaps it explains better than anything else the recent action taken by Senators William Proxmire and Frank Lausche on the foreign aid bill.

... C. W. Harder

While at this writing, it is not known what action the House will take on the current bill to throw more money away on foreign give aways, regardless of what happens, there is an indelible record that these two senators took a stand against compromising with evil.

... Both of them were behind the move which barred any foreign aid to communist controlled governments. This was later amended to permit food to be released to the peoples of these nations, but this does not mitigate the principle involved.

... Jugoslavia, as is well known, is controlled by a dedicated communist, one Tito, who has a long record of irresponsible butchery. He did fall out with his fellow Kremlin butchers.

... So immediately, the U. S. taxpayers are plundered to give this Slavonian butcher jet planes, all sorts of hardware. But he's still a communist, and will live as a communist, and will die as a communist.

... The State Dept. policy, soft headed as it may be, was also extended to a character named Gromulka in Poland, as nice a murdering little thug as it is possible to find anywhere. Of course he's a big hearted fellow, too. He takes the American tax dollars given him and in turn gives foreign aid to Communist China, and a few other places.

... But it has been written there can never be any compromise with Satan. It is written that evil is evil, good is good, and never shall the twain meet.

... However, for the past couple of decades, the United States State Department has been ridden throughout with those who would compromise with Satan.

... And perhaps, in all fairness, perhaps these officials are just a product of the times which tries to establish that alcoholics, drug addicts, sex deviates, and all the rest of this motley crew, do not mean ill, they are just suffering from an illness and need sympathetic treatment, and perhaps the soothing ministrations of a psychiatrist.

... And it is perhaps possible to understand why the State Dept. would take such a stand.

... But good is good, evil is evil. Communism is communism. Democracy is democracy. And perhaps the American nation today is a little better off, can face the future with a little more confidence, because, regardless of State Dept. attitudes, Senators Proxmire and Lausche, took a stand for plain old fashioned morality.
