Kaseberg Calves Tested And Classified

Weaner calves on the Larry Kaseberg ranch were graded and weighed last week to continue the yearly Beef Cattle Performance Testing program on this herd. John Landers, livestock extension specialist, assisted with the program. The yearly weights and grades are used to establish and index for the cows and aid in selection of animals to keep, and animals to discard.

Other growers in the county are planning to continue this program. We would be happy to work with any other operators interested. These can be either pure bred or commercial herds. The main necessity is to have the cows and calves identified so the calf can be matched to the cow and birth date. A portable scales is available to work with growers in this type program.

OUR WIDE CHOICE OF PRICES enables the family to limit the cost to its needs or wishes.

Cut Local Prices

Prices for the 1963 wheat and barley crops grown in the Pacific Northwest probably will be lower as a result of the farm bill signed by the President reports Stephen C. Marks, OSU extension economist.

The act lowers the rational average basic wheat support price by 18 cents, to $1.82 a bushel, which will probably influence the market price.

It also appears that the basic support price for barley, main feed grain grown in the Pacific Northwest, may be reduced about $6 a ton, although it is not known exactly how barley support prices will be operated. This would bring lower prices unless export markets become heavy buyers as they were last year, Marks notes.

Under the provisions of the bill, growers who reduce wheat plantings at least 20 percent below allotments will receive two types of payments from the government.

One will be 18 cents a bushel for the normal production of acreage devoted to wheat. The other will be payment for the acreage reduction, based on 50 percent of the value of normal production on acreage diverted to conservation uses. Neither of these payments will affect the cash market, the economist stressed.

Also entering into the wheat price picture is government action regarding carryover stocks. As of July 1, hard red wheats made up 96 percent of the carryover and white wheat, grown mainly in the Pacific Northwest, only 2 percent.

If government officials decide to build up white wheat stocks, they may hold down PL 480 authorizations under Title I of the law which authorizes sales for local foreign currency rather than dollars. Such action could cause wheat prices to stay near present levels or decline, Marks believes.

On the other hand, if the government decides to help white wheat prices rise to equal those of the hard red wheat, currently above the basic loan level due to the sedimentation test program, they could allow India, Pakistan, Formosa and Korea to have more white wheat, which they prefer, and requires them to take less hard red wheat under PL 480 action. Barley growers in 1963 who make a minimum reduction of 20 percent of their combined 1959-60 base acreage of barley, corn and grain sorghum will receive two types of direct government payments.

One will be a payment-in-kind on all barley produced on the base acreage of these three crops, Mark said. The other payment will be based on acreage diverted to conservation uses times normal yield on diverted acreage times 50 percent of the support price. Those who do not comply with the act will receive only the income from the sale of their barley on the open market, he added.

If the new law remains in operation for the 1964 crop, barley supports may be reduced still further, Marks warns. Beginning in 1964, the law directs the Secretary of Agriculture to set supports for feed grains at a point between 50 and 90 percent of parity that will not result in addition to stocks.

Estimates for the 1962 barley production in the Pacific Northwest have been revised upward, with Oregon's crop now estimated at 17,261,000 bushels, 6 percent larger than last year and 2 percent above average.
