Price Says Research Makes Farming Good

Dividends measured in multi-million dollar totals come from agricultural research in Oregon every year, a report prepared by F.E. Price, dean and director of agriculture at OSU reveals. Dramatic advances are being made in agriculture and they're not coming by chance, Price said. "They're coming from research". In terms of "no inflation dollars, cash receipts from farm marketings have doubled in Oregon since 1925, Price notes in his summary on accomplishments of the OSU Agricultural Experiment station Agriculture is now a 600,000,000 yearly business in Oregon with 47 percent coming from live stock and 53 percent from crops. Price cites these examples of ag research dividends. Omar wheat variety introduced by OSU and the USDA boosted wheat yields in Sherman county by nearly 10 bushels to the acre, adding about $1,800,000 a year to the county wheat crop. A new variety, Gaines, promises to boost yields perhaps as much as 20 bushels to the acre in the area around Pendleton. Fertilizer was not considered of value on wheat, Oregon's No.1 crop, until recent research. Use of nitrogen has increased wheat yields by 15 to 2 percent. Sagebrush land that was once nearly worthless is being reclaimed and seeded to grass for cattle. Research on chemical control of sagebrush, best grass varieties, and development of a special seeder make it possible. Oregon's $20,000,000 grass and legume seed industry was developed from research at OSU, says Price. This in turn brought a $1,000,000 seed cleaning and processing industry to Oregon. Research in winter pears has produced storage and ripening procedures that opened new markets. Winter pears are now a $15,000,000 industry in the state. Current research at OSU is expected to add 6-12 weeks more to the storage life. Sprinkler irrigation has brought thousands of acres under water, increased crop yields and quality, and generated a big sprinkler irrigation manufacturing industry for Oregon. Oregon growers of vegetable crops and small fruits receive $45,000,000 annually; the processed value is $110,000,000. Conservative estimates of annual savings from the diseases that have yielded to research discoveries made include: fowl pox vaccination for chickens and turkeys, $250,000 savings annually; pullorum control for poultry, $400,000; selenium treatment for white muscle disease and scours in lamb and calves, $650,000; mastitis control in dairy cattle, $800,000; brucellosis control in dairy and beef cattle, $1,000,000. Weed control in strawberries has been cut from $100 per acre 10 years ago to $20 per acre now. Controls have been developed for damaging deadbug disease in cherries, which in 1954 threatened the cherry industry in Marion and Polk counties. An OSU entomologist has developed artificial soil beds for alkali bees that are such highly effective pollinators of alfalfa seed that yields have been increased 200 to 500 percent. Shifts in crops have come with research, Price continued. Grain and hay are giving way to more intensive and higher paying crops such as peas, green beans, berries and seeds. Both farmers and consumers benefit from the research. "One farmer today in one hour can produce what four farmers did in the same time shortly after World War I. That same farmer increased his productivity three times as fast as the worker in industry between 1947 and 1958. "The average American consumer uses only 19 percent of his earnings now to buy food, compared to 56 percent in Russia and 40 to 50 percent in most other nations", Price continued. "Just 10 years ago, too, food costs in America accounted for more than 23 percent of the average family income".
