GRANDPA'S GOOD LOOKS

We think we have never looked at the pictures displayed annually at the Wasco County Pioneer meeting without noting, and hear their note, the fine features grandpa had.

These men of the 1880s were good looking men, whether bearded or shaved with a Wade & Butcher razor, they looked like strong and resolute men. They had to be.

A man's experience is written on his face. The weak look weak and the determined look determined. These old faces are those of men who traversed a continent and established the moral and economic life they desired in a new land amidst Indians and without many tools.

ROCKEFELLER RESIGNS

We feel that the marriage of Nelson Rockefeller to Mrs. Murphy while he was presumably a candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency, was, in fact, a tacit resignation from that effort.

Whether the divorce of the first Mrs. Rockefeller and the subsequent marriage to Mrs. Murphy was all the same act we do not know. But we are sure it will be so construed.

His marriage is another indication of his disinclination to stay by the older moral code. A nation without morals comes from people without morals and neither will long survive.

If Mr. Rockefeller wishes to continue to spend his money in what we hope and expect will be a losing effort to become president it will be one way to put the Rockefeller millions into more useful channels. And that is laudable.

NEW CONSTITUTION

The proposed state constitution that was passed by the house Monday is most likely an exercise in futility. The senate may pass it over the heads of some rather vocal opposition. But we do not think the people will approve it.

The trouble with Oregon's present constitution is the people, not the constitution. Since the days of the initiative and referendum we have given the constitution a beating at nearly every election. We've put everything into it including detailed rules about apportionment of legislatures, form of county government, establishment of banks, war veteran benefits, power development and other extraneous matter that should have been in the statutes instead of the constitution.

If the writers of the new constitution removed the section permitting such change the people would not stand for it: they like to put things into the constitution which makes it seem like some final and decisive disposal had been made. But isn't Oregonians have voted for a higher percentage of constitution changes than statute changes.

Oregon's constitution is very long and pretty awkward. Much of it has been made by the voters themselves whether from deliberate judgment or from partisan pique. They are proud of the six percent limitation of the ban on emergency clauses on tax bills of the initiative and referendum, with which to implement their angers.

From what we hear we doubt if this legislature is sufficiently popular with the people to have its approval of a constitution by vote getting importance. The removal of any safeguards from the constitution and delegation of them to the legislature will not seem a good solution.

THEY'RE OK

Anyone who thinks the coming generation is growing up to be a generation of sheep are due for some changed conceptions.

Jeanette Belshee, daughter of Mr and Mrs Leltoy Belshee, and now Mrs Darrell Barstow, is going to graduate from Oregon State this June. She has written a paper for a course on basic concepts. Her argument in the paper is that parents must be responsible for the training of their children for to put the entire burden on the schools is to invite almost certain failure.

Parental training must include training in self reliance giving a child a chance to use his abilities, under supervision for a time, but with gradually greater independence. "If we are to have any peace of mind," she argues, "in the world in which we live and that in which we may be living in the future, we must have the capacity to use our free thought and our reasoning to find values we can live by that are objective and useable".

She also quotes Buddha, in a plea for independent thought: "Believe nothing, no matter where you read it or who has said it, not even if I have said it, unless it agrees with your own reason and your own common sense."

The major part of the paper is a plea for self reliance and methods of training children to be self reliant. Children must be made to feel secure through a proper amount of affection. And parents must teach public responsibility through practicing it themselves.

The paper warns against teaching children the prejudices of the parents, not even the usual ones about conduct and politics. But training in thought should be given so that children can decide for themselves.

Wheat Stocks Above Last Year's Total But Below April Average

Pacific Northwest wheat stocks in all positions totaled 51,829,000 bushels for Oregon, Washington, and northern Idaho on April 1, 1963. This was 13 percent more than the 45,731,000 bushels on hand a year earlier, but less than one-half the area's 5-year average wheat supplies for April 1 of 93,217,900 bushels.
Farm storages held only 6,617,000 bushels on April 1, down 19 percent from the 8,152,000 bushels held on Pacific Northwest farms a year earlier.

However, interior elevators, with 12,915,000 bushels on hand this year, were showing a 19-percent increase over the 10,840,000-bushel stocks of a year ago. Terminal wheat stocks, at 27,789,000 bushels, were up 28 percent from a year ago, but merchant mill stocks of 4,508,000 bushels, were 11 percent less than April 1, 1962 level.
