How Cordula Won the Prize

On the day that the Princess Brigtia's prize was to be awarded little Cordula went to school with a sad heart. She had so much wanted to win that prize. Sibylla and Franze and Helena and all the other girls had been working on their bits of embroidery and fine stitching these many weeks, but poor little Cordula had been forced to keep the baby happy, because the good mother had been ill.

The beautiful Princess Brigtia was a fine needlewoman, and she had offered the prize of a gold piece to the little girl who could present the best specimen of her own needlework. Now the day had come on which the work was to be exhibited and the prize awarded.

Each little girl brought forward her work when she was called and laid it on a small table beside the princess. When it was Cordula's turn these were tears in her blue eyes as she told the reason of her empty hands.

"But, dear child," replied the princess, "thou sayest that the mother is better. Hast thou had no time, then, for so little piece of sewing?"

"Indeed, I have not," the little girl said earnestly. "Now that the mother is able to cook and sweep I have had to mend stockings all the time I am not in school for the five brothers and the baby. Oh, they make so many holes in the stockings, dear Princess Brigtia."

"Ah, little one, run home and fetch one of those stockings thou hast lately mended."

"Once in her father's cottage a new difficulty arose. All the stockings that had been mended had been put on that very morning. Not one pair was left. Then Cordula, in despair turned to the baby. He had been dressed only a couple of hours. Cordula took of his little stockings. The mother drew it from the rear foot, scanned it carefully and said:

"Take it, child, and if thou tellest her why the crosses are there I am sure she will pardon them."

So the baby's stockings took its place among the dainty muslins and silks and linsens and when the prize was awarded it did not go to Sibylla for her magnificent lace bodice, Helen for her silk embroidery. No; it went to dear little Cordula, because the princess declared that the stitches in the baby's stockings were the very smallest and finest of all and that the little darn was the most beautiful piece of needlework there.

The Bird Catcher.
The player who takes the direction of a game is called the bird catcher. Every other player selects some bird for imitation when called upon by the bird catcher, who stands in the center of the seated ring of players and relates a story referring to each bird. As the name of each bird is mentioned the one who has chosen it makes a sound similar to that made by the bird, and each player must have his hands placed on his knees. If the bird catcher refers to the owl, every one places his hands behind him; if he refers to the parrot, every one has his hands in the air; if he refers to the crow, every one has his hands on the floor. During the course of the story, when the words "All the birds of the air" are spoken, all the players must imitate the bird they are representing.

Spontaneous Combustion.
Little experiments in the way of bringing out spontaneous combustion are often amusing and quite startling. Here is one which may be accomplished without a particle of danger:
Mix a small quantity of chlorate of potassa with spirit of wine in a strong saucer or shallow bowl; then add a little sulphuric acid, and a beautiful orange colored vapor will arise and burst into flame with a loud crackling noise.

A Portable Game.
A pleasant pastime for little ones on bed days when getting out of doors is impossible is for them to take their slates and pencils and write across the tops of the slates a four syllabled word. Then see how many sentences can be written with the letters contained in this one word. Sometimes quite a story can be made up of words containing the letters spelling one very long, many syllabled word.

The Lost Princess

Once upon a time there was a beautiful princess named Helen, who was betrothed to a prince of a neighboring kingdom. Her father, the king, was very old and she had to go to school with him. When she found out that she was to be married she was very sad. She had to go to school with her father and she was very tired. One day she was sitting under a tree and she fell asleep. Now, in this same forest there lived a wicked ogre, and one day when he was out hunting he came across Helen sleeping under the tree, and he said to himself, "I will take that girl home and fatten her for my supper." But when they got to the castle Helen would not eat anything, and the ogre became very angry and gave her five crayons, telling her to go in her room and color all the dots on the wall paper, and if there were two dots of the same color he would give her a beating.

When Helen entered the room she was very much surprised to see a fairy princess standing with her back to the door busily touching the dots with his fingers, and the minutes he touched them they changed to beautiful colors.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Use For Common Salt.
Put a pinch of salt in whites of eggs when heating them; also use it when whipping cream.

Place salt in oven under baking tins in order to prevent scorching of their contents.

Put salt in cold water when you wish to cool a dish.

Put salt in whitewash to make it stick.

Use salt for cleaning piano keys, knife handles and glass spotted by hard water.

Salt dissolved in alcohol will remove grease stains from clothing.

Use salt to remove ink stains from carpet when the ink is fresh.

Rub salt on prints before washing to set their color.

To make a candle burn all night put finely powdered salt on it until the salt reaches the black part of the wick. In this way a mild and steady light may be kept all through the night by a small piece of candle.

The Home Doctor.
Use Ipecacuanha as an emetic in sudden attacks of croup, bronchitis or whooping cough.

A cleansing gargle is made by dissolving a heaped teaspoonful of salt and carbonate of soda mixed in equal quantities in half a tumbler of water.

Window Shade Holder.
An inventor has devised an entirely new idea in window shade holders, an illustration of which is herewith shown. The advantage of the device is that it can be changed to fit any ordinary window frame without destroying its future usefulness in case of change of residence with change in size of window frame. The body of this holder is made of a bar divided in the center, the two parts being adjustably attached to a grooved hinge by means of thumb screws passed through slots in the hinge plates. On one side of the slots are projecting teeth or a Ball Test.

A large ball is made with either a leather or a canvas cover and stuffed with cotton to weigh from three to twelve pounds. One of the players is selected to be "tagger," and another carries the ball. The "tagger" tries to touch the ball, and when it is touched the player in whose hand it was last is "it." Players can run carrying the ball or save themselves by throwing the ball to another player. The ball should be constantly changing hands.

A Buried City.
You will find a city buried within two words in one of the lines of the following stanza. It is a city far from this country. Can you tell what it is? Yahn is this orient beauty's smile.
Too far these weary travelers roam:
Hope kindles not at faintest wit
Which fails to bring their western home.
(Answer—Yahn.)

Byring the Carpet.
Worn and faded Brussels and velvet carpets may be made to look like new by re-dyeing. After the carpet has been cleaned and laid wide it off with vinegar water and allow to dry. Prepare a good dye, selecting the predominant color in the carpet, and apply with a wide paint brush. All colors and shades will not absorb the dye alike, so that a design will remain and all worn places will be covered.

For a Troublesome Cough.
For a troublesome cough the following recipe will prove effectual: Half a pint of strained honey, mixed cold with the juice of a lemon and a tablespoonful of sweet oil. Take a teaspoonful when the cough is troublesome.

Cheap Disinfectant.
A very reasonable but efficacious disinfectant is made by dissolving one pound of green copperas in one quart of water. Pour down the drains.

The Pincushion.
If you are using hair to stuff a pincushion it is a wise precaution to take it first.
