A Nightmare Yankee

(Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)

Bill Meacham, private—thirteenth Pennsylvania infantry, escaped prisoner of war, stood at the edge of a wood looking at a house standing in the center of a plantation. Bill's stomach was as empty as a haversack at the end of a two weeks' campaign, and he was wondering if he dare go to the house and ask for something to eat. Would he rather starve or run the risk of going back to that frightful prison pen? Then he looked himself over. He had no head covering whatever, and the last time his hair had been combed was before the fight in which he had been captured three months ago. Half a leg of his trousers was missing as well as the right sleeve of his coat and a part of the left sleeve. As to the coat's skirt, it hung in ragged folds. One old rubber shoe and a bit of blanket constituted his foot covering. It was not dangerous alone, but it was not safe either. He had no money, and he was not a native of the South. He was a Yankee, and he was a prisoner of war.

"I'm not afraid of me," pleaded Bill. "I'm harmless, quite harmless. I've passed a month in the hands of the rebels, and I've been a prisoner of war. I'd be ever so obliged if you'd give me a bit of corn pone or something to keep me from starving."

Bill's tone was sad, and by this time the girl began to take in the pitiful situation. She was very young, and her sympathies easily touched. She stood for a moment thinking, then said:

"We're all loyal to the south up at the house, and if you go there we'd have to give you up. It's a shame, but I'd be ever so obliged if you'd give me a bit of corn pone or something to keep me from starving."

Bill gave her a grateful look, which, though grieved, didn't frighten her so much this time. She went toward the house, and he crawled under the bush. Presently she came back with some scraps she had gathered from the breakfast table rolled in a napkin, gave them to Bill and told him he'd better be off. Bill, in his haste, forgetting himself, advanced to clasp her hand, but she darted back with a bit of a shriek, then, seeing that she had hurt his feelings, said:

"It isn't you I'm afraid of; it's the rebels."

Well, Bill backed away from her so as not to show the remains of his protruding shirt tail and went on his way. When the war ended Bill got a commission in the regular army. During the administration of President Grant he was on duty in Washington, which meant that he loomed most of the day and attended social functions in the evening. It was not long before he married the daughter of a southern congressman, and a very happy match he made.

One morning he kissed his wife and went to his office in the war department, as usual. About 11 o'clock Mrs. Meacham was informed by a maid that there was a tramp at the door who insisted on seeing the lady of the house. "But I wouldn't advise you to go down," he's the worst looking beast I ever saw," Mrs. Meacham sent the maid back to tell the man that she was busy, and the maid returned with the information that the man was bound to see the lady, and if she didn't come down he would go up. If there had been telephones in those days Mrs. Meacham would have called the police. But telephones had not yet been invented, and there was no man in the house. Mrs. Meacham finally determined to go down. There in the hall stood the tramp. He wore no hat on his uncombed hair, but little more than half of his clothing was available. One foot was incased in a piece of blanket, the other in a rubber shoe. Mrs. Meacham's terror was somewhat mollified by seeing one or two brass buttons on his coat.

"My husband is in the war department," she gasped. "Go to him. He'll provide for you and see that you are taken care of by the government."

The man suddenly put his hand in his hair and clinched something. "For heaven's sake," cried the lady, "don't bring vermin into this house. Go away! Call on Major Meacham. He'll attend to you."

"It's hard lines," whined the tramp, "when a man can't get a crust in his own house."

"Good gracious, ma'am," exclaimed the man, "he's mad!"

The tramp looked at Mrs. Meacham and smiled, a horrible grin which, once seen, would never be forgotten. "Don't you remember the Yankee you fed one day in the flower garden down in Dixie?"

Yes, Mrs. Meacham remembered him. She had never forgotten him. "Oh, heavens," she wailed, "have I married that horrible nightmare of a Yankee? Why didn't you tell me?"

"Tell you? How would I have ever got you if I had?"

Major Meacham did not like his wife again tell him he had a Turkish bath.

ELBERT T. BENTLEY.

Cupid and Conversation.

By SUSAN H. MORLEY.
Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

Mrs. Naughton came out of the parlor and shut the door carefully behind her.

"You're too good for you to set in there tonight," she said. "My, you can't see out of the window! There's no sense in freezing this room to let the heat go in there."

She knelt down before the battered sheet iron stove and ran the poker vigorously through the red-hot coals with a "You can set in here tonight, Dena," she went on. "For myself I prefer this room any day to the parlor."

Dena flatteringly swept up the ashes and did other trivial things, as her mother directed. The room had the shabby, much used look which no amount of care could transform into cheer or even homeliness.

Dena felt it knew each time she returned to it after her absence as a district schoolteacher. If she could have bought a new carpet and a chair or two and a stove with linings and nickel she might have made it look to her liking, but her mother would not allow it.

Beauty in Mrs. Naughton's eyes was of trivial consequence indeed, although there were times when she regretted her daughter's apparent lack of it.

Mrs. Naughton unfolded her skirt and smoothed out an imaginary crease. "You better set the teakettle on, Dena. And stir up the kitchen fire. It isn't quite supper hour yet, but I like to have everything ready in time."

Dena hurried from the room. There were tears in her eyes, and her face looked flushed and watery. What was the use of it all? She thought bitterly as she filled the teakettle.

And she had dreamed obedient to her mother's bidding these four Saturday nights.

"Dena's head went down with a groan. She knew that her mother would drag her poor little secret forth and dissect it mercilessly before the hungry eyes of the old gossip who was almost her only friend. The outer door opened, closed, and then all was still. Dena cried until she could cry no longer.

The doorbell jangled, and she sprang off the bed, pulled her cheeks hurriedly with her damp handkerchief and ran downstairs. Her hands trembled as she opened the door, too dazed to realize who was waiting outside.

"Good evening, Dena," said a pleasant voice. "May I come in?"

He put her aside gently, entered and closed the door himself. Dena stood motionless with surprise and joy.

"You're glad to see me?" Did you think I was never coming again?" He took her hands and looked down at her tenderly. Then Dena's voice came, and she looked up at him.

"Yes, I did think so. And I didn't blame you, for I understood, Oh, Dick!"

He took her into his arms. "But I found, dear, that nothing on earth was a sufficiently big obstacle to keep me from loving you and wanting you and seeing you again to tell you so. I come back in a month for you, can you, will you be ready to go with me?"

"Oh, Dick!" Dena cried, and her six weeks of trouble and doubt and despair melted from her face, a garment of snow in this new sunshine.

A Parisian Tragedy.
"I am here to kill you for denouncing Colney!" The speaker was a man named Koent and the scene a small, fifth rate cafe in a mean street in Paris.

Koent was a member of a gang of Apaches, the murderous Parisian hooligans. Another member of the gang, Colney, had been denounced to the police by a woman named Sarah Baron.

A court of Colney's associates had tried the woman in her absence, condemned her and by lot had chosen Camille Koent to carry out their sentence.

"Make up your mind you have to die," continued the man calmly. "I give you a quarter of an hour to settle your affairs." With these words he left the cafe.

Sarah Baron minutes later the wretched woman summoned up courage to leave the place. She was hardly in the street before Koent sprang upon her with an open knife and struck her to the heart.

Koent was arrested, but owing to the foolish leniency of French criminal law escaped with penal servitude for life.

This story reads like cheap fiction. It is, however, an absolute fact, and is an account of a young lady at Brighton who undertook to see to the supper of the amazing quantity of 300 oysters, with a certain amount of bread and butter. This feat she performed, greatly to the astonishment of all present.

Teethpicks.

The employment of teethpicks is very ancient. In Greece the "History of Greece" we find that Agathocles, "among the worst of Greeks," was poisoned by a medicated quill handed to him for cleaning his teeth after dinner.

Teethpicks were in common use in the time of the Caesars. Martial tells us that one made of a chip of mastic wood (gentianaceae) was the best, but that if you run short of such timber a quill will serve your purpose, and he ridicules an old fellow who was in the habit of digging a way at his gums with his polished toothpick, though he had not a tooth left in his head.

Teethpicks occur rarely of silver, but pieces of wood or of feathers with a red end as quills in our day were most usual. The toothpick is the Anglo-Saxon toothpick. The old name was picktooth. It was imported by travelers from Italy and France, and the usage of it was long deemed an affected mark of gentility. It was worn as a trophy in the hat, and Mr. Thomas Overbury described the habit of the pick of fashion, "with a picktooth in his hat." Bishop Earle says of an idle gallant, "His picktooth bears a great part in his discourse."

Help for Those Who Have Stomach Trouble.
After doctoring for about twelve years for a bad stomach trouble, and spending nearly five hundred dollars for medicine and doctors' fees, I purchased my wife one box of Chamberlain's Stomach Remedy, which she had heard much good of, and she continued to use them and they have done her more good than all of the medicine I bought before, says Samuel Boyer, Folsom, La. This medicine is for sale by Moro Pharmacy. Samples free.

Black Eye for Blackstone.
"Your honor," said Mornet Prudett, the criminal lawyer, "in a report and modern law are not sufficient to convince you, let me read this section from Blackstone, the father of the common law, an undoubted authority. He supports my contention precisely."

"You had as well sit down, Mr. Prudett. I have decided the point against you," replied the court. "You need not cite more cases. I have overruled your demurrer and do not care to hear you read the section."

"I know you have your honor. I know you have," sarcastically said the redoubtable lawyer. "I know it, but I just wanted to show the court what a fool Blackstone was."—Kansas City Times.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy the best and surest of all remedies for the treatment of all who use this remedy; its cures are so prompt and effectual that people take pleasure in recommending it. For sale by Moro Pharmacy.

Eating Oysters.
Savory the quester way of cooking an oyster is that mentioned in the year 1072, when Richardson, the first great, took a live coal on his tongue; on this he put a raw oyster in its shell, while an attendant blew upon the coal with bellows until it flamed and sparkled in his mouth. This continued until the oyster opened and was perfectly cooked.

The European Magazine for 1800 contains an account of a young lady at Brighton who undertook to see to the supper of the amazing quantity of 300 oysters, with a certain amount of bread and butter. This feat she performed, greatly to the astonishment of all present.

Tortured on a Horse.
"For ten years I couldn't ride a horse without being in torture from piles," writes L. S. Napier, Rogers, Ky., when all doctors and other remedies failed. Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured me. I am fallible for piles, burns, scalds, cuts, boils, fever, eczema, salt-rheum, corns, etc. at Moro Pharmacy guarantee.

Armor Plated Pawnshops.
The latest of a Chinese pawnshop is a terse incognito to most people, Chinese and English. Few are admitted within its mysterious walls except those directly connected with the business. A traveler was recently permitted to inspect one in an island town, and was surprised to find the entire building incased in sheet iron about one-eighth of an inch thick. It must have cost a large sum to build an iron house of the usual lofty brick edifice, yet there it was, even to the roof. It served a twofold purpose—a protection against fire and thieves. Yet even within this iron castle night watchmen armed with heavy revolvers and clubs in bullet proof jackets ever keep watch.

A Night Rider's Raid.
The worst night riders are calomel, croton oil or aloes pills; they raid your bed to rob you of rest. Not so with Dr. King's New Life Pills; they never dislodge or inconvenience, but always cleanse the system, curing colds, headache, constipation, malaria, etc. at the Moro Pharmacy.

The President's Flag.
The presidential flag has a blue ground, with the arms of the United States in the center. It was designed and first used by President Arthur in 1883 and is now hoisted at the White House whenever the president is on board of any government vessel.

Grimaldi.
Joseph Grimaldi—1770-1837—was perhaps the most eminent pantomime clown that ever appeared on the stage.

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW

What a Heap of Happiness it Would Bring to More Homes.

Hard to do housework with an aching back.
Brings you hours of misery at leisure or at work.

Women only know the cause—that Backache pains come from sick kidneys, and other annoyances arising from disordered kidneys. I tried so many remedies without being helped that I did not have much confidence in Dr. Don's Kidney Pills, but I nevertheless procured a box. I received quick relief, continued, and was cured so completely that I have not had the least sign of kidney trouble since. I can recommend Don's Kidney Pills knowing them to be a reliable remedy."

All He Wanted to Know.
"Moria, I'm going to Dr. Squillips. I'm going to his heart trouble."

"What do you know about Dr. Squillips, John?"

"All I know about him is that Mr. Gotsam recommends him to me."

"Mr. Gotsam is one of the stockholders of the life insurance company that is carrying a $30,000 stake on my life."—Chicago Tribune.

Bowel Complaint in Children.
When six months old the little girl of E. N. Dewey, a merchant of Agnewville, Va., had an attack of cholera infantum. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy was given and effected a complete cure; the remedy has proven very successful in cases of bowel complaint in children, and when given according to directions can be relied upon with perfect confidence. When reduced with water and sweetened it is pleasant to take, which is of great importance when a remedy must be given to young children. For sale by Moro Pharmacy.

Her Valuation.
Little Mary looked at the penny which had been given to her for the collection plate, with evident satisfaction. "You're a good girl," she said, "and you're a good girl." "How much are you going to give?"

Her aunt, opening her hand, displayed a quarter of a dollar.

"Oh," exclaimed Mary, excitedly, "don't do it. It isn't worth it!"—Ladies Home Journal.

Life 100,000 Years Ago.
Scientists have found in a Swiss cave bones of men who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beasts. Today the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Me., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived, he writes, suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." To cure such lung trouble, chest colds, and prevent pneumonia, it is the best medicine on earth. 50c and $1.00, guaranteed by Moro Pharmacy. Trial bottle free.

A Russian Legend.
The czar Alexander I. while in Siberia is alleged to have led a double life and also to have arranged a bogus funeral of himself. The story has long been firmly credited by the middle and lower classes in Russia, and it has even received a measure of confirmation from the best of Alexander's biographers, General Schlieders.

See Mother Grow Young.
"It would be hard to overstate the wonderful change in my mother since she began to use Electric Bitters," writes Mrs. W. L. Gilpatrick, Danforth, Me., although past 50 she seems really to be growing young again. She suffered untold misery from dyspepsia for 20 years. At last she could neither eat, drink nor sleep. Doctors gave her up until remedied by Dr. Electric Bitters worked such wonders for her health."

They investigate all vital organs, cure liver and kidney troubles, induce sleep, impart strength and appetite. Only 50c at Moro Pharmacy.

Proper Treatment for Dysentery

And diarrhoea. The great mortality from dysentery and diarrhoea is due to a lack of proper treatment at the first stages of the disease.
