Spain spends considerable time and money to keep from being demolished.

Send The Observer to your absent friends. It is better than a letter, and gives all the home news. Four months for 50c.

Once again a Venezuelan row which ought to be settled in police court threatens to assume the dignity of a revolution.

Richard Croker's oft quoted opinion that New York is the best governed city in the world has not tempted him to live there.

In spite of the spread of the automobile and the invention of the aeroplane a good team of mules is worth more than ever.

W. E. Corey declares that the steel business is about to make more money than ever before. Paris society should rejoice.

President Taft has never expressed the hope that corporations would develop paroxysms of delight at the prospect of being taxed.

The late E. H. Harriman eclipsed even his record as an active financier when he drew up a will that is conceded to be absolutely lawyer proof.

The tariff experts are to receive $7,500 a year each, with clerks, allowances, and the etseteras which go with soft snaps. And they aren't very expert, either, to tell the truth.

Mars is leaving the earth again after a brief call, and really we know practically no more of the planet than we knew before. It is possible that the less we know of the Martians the more we shall respect them.

You may bet your last dollar that Uncle Joe knows what he is talking about when he asserts that the "insurgents," LaFollette, Cummings, Beverage, et. al., will be on the side of W. J. Bryan as soon as he succeeds in finding a 3d democratic party.

The conference between President Taft and President Diaz is to be a private one save for the presence of President Taft's private secretary. This is announced as an important piece of news, but why anybody should have expected a public conference between these officials it is not easy to imagine.

Spain has been executing its "undesirables" with scant ceremony for centuries, without a protest being filed, but the shooting of Professor Ferrer has raised a storm which is shaking all the thrones of Europe. There is a limit to all things, even to the "divine right" of a few to rule the many.

R. P. Longenecker, a Chicago tenant, who has been unsuccessful in obtaining renewal of a lease of an apartment because a child had been born to him therein, brought suit against the landlord, under the new statute, demanding that the landlord be forced to renew the lease. The outcome of this suit will be watched with interest by a good many families in the large cities.

The physician who has discovered hookworm and traced its ravages in the South has also found that the class of poor whites whom it affects must stop the eating of hog meat before they can hope for relief. Such a remedy will be found ineffective among a people who would rather get what they like with what they don't like, than go without it.

It is not at all surprising that a Los Angeles attorney in Chicago should have turned highwayman. Self preservation is still an entirely natural law.

The pure food commission in Washington state is on the trail of meat dealers using preservatives. Seventeen were convicted in Seattle in one day and fined an aggregate of $10,100 for treating hamburger steak with "freezum," a chemical which causes putrified scraps to lose their odor and look fresh. Deputy commissioner Adams has evidence enough to convict 60 dealers in Tacoma, Olympia, Aberdeen, Hoquiam, Chehalis and Centralia. Experts at the Seattle hearing testified that the use of preservatives was positively harmful.

With the closing of the exposition, Seattle University, on whose campus the fair was held, became a large beneficiary, inheriting city property valued at $1,658,088. Of this amount $600,000 represents permanent buildings erected by the state and loaned to the fair; $207,935 represents semi-permanent buildings put up by the state, now available for the university, and the balance consists of improvements to the campus and structures put up by other interests, which have been bequeathed to the university.

James R. Walsh, former bank president and then bank wrecker, has been denied a release by the court of appeals from his five year sentence to a federal prison. People will applaud or condemn that decision according to the light in which they regard the original sentence. But certain it is that when some rich or prominent man is put behind prison bars every effort is made by his friends to have him set at liberty without regard to his guilt or innocence, and sooner or later they generally succeed. It is all wrong and creates discontent because of the feeling that the law and clemency are stretched in favor of the wealthy criminal and denied the poor one. In the eye of the law there should be equality in practice as well as theory.

CLEAN MILK.

Some Suggestions for a County where There are no Dairies.

By O. J. Goffin, M. D.
Mayor of Moro.

The Oregon state board of health is energetically occupying itself with milk sanitation in the state. Although there are no dairies in Sherman county, a few words as to how milk should be cared for by the farmers in this county, would not come amiss. Milk being a good medium for the rapid development of pathogenic germs is continually a menace to the consumers' health when contaminated with these disease germs.

Taking it for granted that the farmers' milch cows are healthy, the milk will be pure and wholesome, and the method to keep it in that state is the object of this paper. Milch cows should be treated with kindness and fed regularly with wholesome food. They should not be allowed to drink impure water, nor out of stagnant pools. The stable should be well ventilated, with plenty of light, and all manure quickly removed. The cows should sleep on beds of clean straw when kept inside, and groomed twice daily. Having thus groomed the cow, with common sense, diligence, and precaution, it remains for the keeper to use due care in the milking. He should use two separate buckets: one containing about two gallons of clean, lukewarm water, and a soft cloth with which he will wash the cows' udders and dry them afterward. Having [illegible] his milking jacket, his hands having been washed with plenty of soap and hot water before the milking begins. The other bucket, having been thoroughly washed and scalded is now ready for the reception of the milk.

Milkers should avoid dipping the fingers in the milk when stripping teats with the thumb and index finger. The hands should be kept dry while milking. The milk should now be carried to a place prepared for its keeping, covered over with a piece of muslin, and allowed to stand a short while, when it is then strained into pans. Useless to say that the strainer and the pans should have been thoroughly sterilized by boiling. The place where the milk is kept should be cool, clean, well aired, and used exclusively for milk. Let the farmers become accustomed to such method of caring for his milch cows and milk, and he will soon find that there is nothing burdensome, nor very scientific about it. Milk is often the only food of weak persons and infants, a fact which should make us doubly careful of its sanitation.

How it Will be at Raleigh.

Morning Oregonian.

Oregon will be well represented by a band of horny-handed sons of toil at the Farmers' National Congress at Raleigh, N. C., next month, With Tom Richardson to tell them where to go, and William McMurray to show them how to get there, and A H Averill to tell them what to use, and S A Lowell and W M Colvig on the side lines, Dr Kerr will be kept busy telling them how we farm to advantage in this greatest section of the worlds' garden.

The Fate of a Hypocrite.

Eugene Guard.

J. Thoburn Ross, the convicted bank wrecker, must go to prison, and most Oregonians believe the punishment just. They do not regard Ross as an extraordinary bad man, but he added the sin of hypocricy to his criminal operations, and all the while he was juggling with the funds of his depositors professed to be better than the average man. Most of us have less sympathy for this sort of a crook than for the average lawbreaker.

A Colville Recluse.

Spokesman Review.

Tucked away in an old lard pail in the safe of Frederick Hoss, a Colville shoemaker, who died at that place several days ago, was found $4,500 in gold, currency to the amount of $2,500, a deposit book showing a credit of $400 in the First National bank of Colville, and city and county warrants, and other securities, aggregating $35,000. Hoss, who has been regarded by many as a recluse, was thought to be almost in poverty. The old man's wealth was discovered when a committee of citizens visited the little shop following Hoss' death, and opened the safe.

Amusements.

RUDOLF OPERA HOUSE.

Hoot Mon! The Musical Highlanders are scheduled to give one performance at the opera house tonight. This promises to be one of the most delightful events of the season, and if the Highlanders prove to be one half as good as the reputation they have established in other localities would seem to indicate, it is a foregone conclusion that a rare treat is in store for local amusement lovers. The company embraces both vocal and instrumental artists as well as comedians, sketch artists and a lady humorist and character impersonator. Prominent among the company are the two Strangs, the well known vocalists and delineators of Scotch character. Miss Strang is said to possess one of the best contralto voices ever heard on the concert stage, while her brother Archie has attained distinction as a singing comedian. The various members are handsomely and appropriately costumed and to say that the company is deserving of liberal support at the hands of amusement lovers is merely to emphasize the belief that there is a large and a legitimate field for organizations of the Highland type, which align themselves squarely on the side of respectability and decency, without losing any of their merit.

The main lesson of leprosy is somewhat philosophic. Europe for centuries was covered with it, but the quick, strong, reactive blood of the white race strangled the germs of death, so it is doubtful if whites could ever be pestered again.

Great Britain is having quite as much trouble with her budget as the United States is with the corporation laws, and the British landlord is as hard to deal with as the American manufacturer.

Once again England has shown herself liberal in granting refuge to alien exiles. One evening last month eight women from the ex-Sultan of Turkey's harem arrived in London, and they are now temporarily living at a boarding house in the fashionable neighborhood of Portland place.
