BRIEF NEWS OF OREGON

Freewater's annual peach day will be held this year on August 16. Work has begun on the erection of the Oregon Electric passenger depot in Albany.

The annual Oregon convention of the National Association of Letter Carriers was held at Corvallis last week.

The Swedish Methodists of Salem have organized a church and bought a church building, which was dedicated Sunday.

After almost four years of construction, Mt. Angel's handsome new Catholic church was dedicated Sunday by Archbishop Christie.

The Enterprise Electric company, that furnishes light and power to several eastern Oregon towns, has increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $300,000.

Several Marshfield men have equated on valuable land in Coos county, which they claim is open to entry. The land is north of Coos Bay and includes some valuable timber.

The newly organized Falls City Potato Growers' Association is the first and only organization of the kind in Polk county, and promises to become an important factor in finding a cash market for potatoes.

S. A. D. Pater of Portland has established his innocence of the charge of forgery made against him by M. A. Fiske, an attorney of Minneapolis, and has instituted suit against Fiske for $50,000 damages.

This year the Salem cherry fair, which will be held July 11, 12 and 13, promises to be the biggest event of the kind ever held in Salem. The first day of the fair will be "Made in Oregon," or manufacturers' day.

Jacob William Karli, the 3-year-old son of Jacob Karli and wife of Astoria, was accidentally drowned while playing with a younger lad on the net racks of the Union Fishermen's Co-operative Packing company in Uniontown.

From the Columbia river district during the month just passed there was shipped to foreign ports nearly 25,000,000 feet of lumber, an amount unequaled during a similar period from this or any other single port in the world.

On the ground that he is not a fugitive from justice and cannot be returned for trial, California's executive has refused to honor a requisition from Governor West for the return of Harold Rees, wanted in Oregon on a charge of wife abandonment.

By means of a suit filed in the circuit court at Salem by the Oregon Electric railway company, it became known that the ultimate destination of the extension being built from Salem to Eugene, which is practically completed as far as Albany, is Roseburg.

As the result of an explosion of gas in an automobile gas lamp, George Stoddard, a prominent lumberman and timber owner of La Grande, is lying in a critical condition in the Grande Ronde hospital with his eyes filled with small particles of glass and his face badly cut.

Efforts to form another Port of Coos Bay are being put forth. Petitions are being circulated and quite freely signed by the citizens. The matter will be presented to the county court in July and will probably be submitted to the vote of the people at the November election.

So assured are fruit growers of a record crop in the Rogue river valley this year that the cry of the growers for more thinners is frequent. Old-timers declare the trees never have been more heavily laden, and now that the danger of frost is practically past, it seems almost certain a bumper crop will be harvested.

The jury at Albany in the case of the Oregon Electric railway company vs. Francis Marion Hyde, et al., has awarded the defendants $4850 damages for the appropriation of land owned by them for railway purposes. The Oregon Electric took about 15 acres of land lying in the edge of the town of Harrisburg for trackage and a site for depot grounds.

Salem is to make its second attempt to secure pure water by purchasing the plant of the Salem Water company, the council at a special meeting having decided to endeavor to obtain the plant through arbitration as to its price, rather than through condemnation, and as soon as the price is agreed upon by the arbitrators, the people will vote upon it.

Secretary Olcott, within whose hands lies now exclusively the fate of the university of Oregon referendum cases, has decreed that the cases shall go to their final disposition before the supreme court and that no agreement will be reached between the parties to the suits to withdraw the cases. It has been the desire of Governor West that the cases be withdrawn.

During the 11 months ending with May there were shipped from the United States 25,519,935 bushels of wheat, valued at $24,909,248. Portland led all the cities of the country with 4,229,943 bushels, worth $2,595,593. During the same period Portland shipped 689,760 barrels of flour, while from the whole country 10,224,536 barrels were sent out of a total value of $47,194,999.

TASSELED SHOES

A Story Showing That All Women Have Their Little Vanities

By CLARISSA MACKIE
Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Adelaide Finch looked timidly at the back of her husband's gray head as it bent over the weekly newspaper. "If I only dared," she whispered to herself. "If I only dared speak to him about it."

"You talking to yourself, Adelaide?" asked Luke, suddenly throwing aside his paper and turning around.

"You talking to yourself?" repeated Luke good naturedly. "Yes, I was thinking." And Adelaide blushed guiltily.

"Now, that there matter you was talking about to yourself. Was you saying poetry or counting stitches?" He looked keenly at his wife's embarrassed countenance. "I sort of reckon you wasn't prying," he added grimly.

"What makes you say that?" demanded Adelaide sharply. All the humor had fled from her face, and she looked frightened.

"I've noticed you ain't said your prayers for three weeks—not once," he asserted reprovingly.

"No," flashed Adelaide, with sudden heat. "No, I haven't prayed for three weeks to a day, and, what's more, I'm not going to pray any more till—till some of my prayers are answered."

"Is that what you were talking about to yourself?" inquired Luke with masculine curiosity where a voluble explanation was not vouchsafed.

"It had something to do with it," Adelaide admitted, this reluctantly.

"Like as not the Lord thought it wasn't best for you, Addie. I suppose it from the lower drawer she took out package after package and tossed them on the floor at her husband's feet. "Look inside," she commanded in a vibrating voice.

Luke picked up a package, tore it open and discovered a bolt of gray and white calico. Another and yet another showed the same contents until five packages lay in disorder around him. He stared back at Adelaide's defiant eyes.

Without a word Adelaide gathered up the packages of calico, placed them in the drawer and closed it. Then she arose and went about the nightly duties—looking down and windows and putting out the cat. At last she passed before Luke with a lighted candle in her hand.

"You can see I don't need any more gray calico," she said quietly and passed upstairs to bed.

The next day was Sunday, and Luke Finch listened to a sermon whose text was "Prayers—answered and unanswered." The sentence that went straight home to Luke's heart was the one which declared that the humblest of us may become the medium through which God answers prayers. After the sermon Luke lingered and spoke to Mr. Goff.

"Do you mean to say, Mr. Goff," he asked anxiously, "that if a woman desires something sinful and foolish—some bit of human vanity such as clothes—if they pray for it long and hard so that they believe that God sends it to them through some person who don't approve of the vanity?"

Mr. Goff smiled. He knew Luke Finch and his drab colored Christianity. He was sorry for drab gowned Adelaide and the drab painted house. He had noted the coldness in Adelaide's usually meek eyes, and he guessed rather well at the situation.

"Even though a person doesn't approve of the vanity you have in mind, Luke," said the minister, "it is very probable that the good God, who knows our poor frail hearts and how childish all of us are at the bottom of things, may entirely approve of the vanity you have in mind and in some unexpected way place it in the way of that person to answer the prayer of the weaker one. Don't be afraid to answer any good impulse that comes into your heart—He meant for all of us to be happy, and though He made the drab colored clothes, remember He also made the rose tinted glory of the sunset skies!"

That evening Luke thumbed the pages of a thick catalogue and pictured therein found the pair of high buttoned boots with small black silk tassels at the top, which his wife had yearned for from her babyhood. The next morning he went to town and ordered a pair like those shown in the catalogue.

The very same day Adelaide Finch cut out the picture of the tasseled boots from the catalogue and mailed it with the price and an order for a pair like the picture to the same store in town. When she left the postoffice there was a bitter little smile curving her lips.

All that week Luke Finch and his wife, Adelaide, avoided the topic of clothes, but when Saturday afternoon came Luke went down to town with an expression of anxious expectancy on his face.

He had scarcely left the house before Adelaide brought from the bedroom a package which she opened with feverish haste—the expressman had brought it that afternoon—and it contained a pair of tasseled shoes, which she had ordered early in the week. With guilty haste she tried them on.

"I can never wear 'em," she whispered Adelaide to herself, while she eyed her short lived pleasure. She removed the tasseled shoes and replaced them with her square toed foot wear. Then, catching up the offending shoes, she ran out of the back door and down through the orchard to Alder brook. She decided not to toss them in the brook and turned aside to follow a stone wall that bordered the road. Finally she flung them far from her with a force borne of desperate determination. They struck some thing soft that gave back a groan, and Adelaide fled back to the house.

She had barely reached the kitchen and was sitting breathlessly beside the stove when the door opened and Luke came in, his arms full of bulky packages and a streak of blood running from a cut on his hand.

"Adelaide," he said sheepishly, tossing on the table a pair of tasseled shoes—such as she had longed for. "The Lord jogged me into answering your prayers, I guess. Inside this box is a pair of tasseled shoes, and as I was coming home in the dark this other pair came out of nowhere and cut my hand, so you got two pairs now. And this here is wall paper for the sitting room. You guess what color?" His eyes shone with anticipation.

"Drab," ventured Adelaide timidly, the shoes directed to her breast. "Pink!" ejaculated Luke, and as their smiles met he was conscious of a warmth at his heart that had never stirred there before.

They leaned over and kissed each other.

The Morning Practice.

The young Mr. Finch told us that the Roman lawyer, Regulus, had a habit of painting round his right eye if he was counsel for the plaintiff, his left eye if he was for the defendant. In our times it is a lawyer is painted around his right eye it means that a witness on the other side has met him since court adjourned. If both eyes are blacked it signifies that he has lied him twice. Instead of once. That's all—Los Angeles Express.

Generous.

"So you are a bill collector," said Mr. Finchpenny.

"Yes, here is one—"

"Keep it, my boy, keep it. You seem to have a nice collection there. For it from me to break it up."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Provoking.

Clara—While I was playing whist with Mrs. Singleton last evening she asked me what was the wrong at least three times. "Maudie—Weren't you provoked?" Clara—I should say so. As I know—Puck.

SPEED IN BASEBALL

What an Infield Double Play Means in Time and Action.

In an article on baseball in Everybody's Magazine the writer shows the wonderful speed that is used in making some of the plays. He says:

Making first base, though more dramatic to watch, is an uneventful expedition compared with the trip to second. It takes a fast man to negotiate the journey in 2.3 seconds. No thrown ball goes over 200 feet, and if a batted ball travels beyond the safe limits of a single throw, it must be relayed by the fielders. While you are watching the outfielder scamper, after the ball the relay line is being swiftly formed in the infield. There could be no such quick and accurate fielding of deep outfield hits if the outfielder taking the ball did not know that behind him was ranged his line of relays ready to take the ball the instant he could throw and throw it. The relay line is a professional team forms almost automatically.

To make a double play in the infield the shortstop, for example, must field a ball that has been batted about 125 feet. He passes the ball from ten to twenty-five feet to the second baseman, who must then throw it ninety feet to first. All this while the batter is running slowly, a trick that, as we have seen, is called a snappy runner to turn in 2.3 seconds. It's a close call and a case of utilizing the fraction of a second, but with sharp fielding the margin is all on the side of the fielders. The double play is the menace ever threatening the runner on first.

Where the Fruit Grows.

A politician in San Francisco who has been in office and on the city payroll for many years was addressing a meeting of his fellow citizens. It was a labor meeting.

"You men must know," spouted the orator, "that you are the great body politic in this city. You are the roots and trunk of our great municipal tree, while we who represent you in office are merely branches on that magnificent tree."

"True for you," piped a man in the back of the hall. "But did you ever notice all the fruit grows on the branches?"—Saturday Evening Post.

As Far as He Got.

One day when William M. Evarist, secretary of state under President Hayes, was a college student he was called on to read Vergil in class.

He started out bravely. "Three times I strove to cast my arms around her neck, and—"

"That's as far as I got, professor," "Well, Mr. Evarist," said the professor, "I think that was quite far enough."

Too Good to Lose.

"Will you be my wife?" asked the star boarder.

"Let me see," mused the landlady. "You have boarded with me four years. You have never grumbled at the food. You have always paid promptly. No, I can't accept you. You are too good a boarder to be put on the free list."—London Telegraph.

A Golden Wedding.

means that man and wife have lived to a good old age and consequently have kept healthy. The best way to keep healthy is to see that your liver does its duty 365 days out of 365. The only way to do this is to keep Ballard's Liver Lintment in the house and take it whenever your liver gets inactive. 50 cents per bottle. Sold by Moro Pharmacy.

"But, John, how did you get rid of all the creditors?" "I lit 'em out of your cigars."—Village Blade.

A Contented Woman.

is always found in the same house with Ballard's Snow Lintment. It keeps every member of the family free from aches and pains, it heals cuts, burns and scalds and cures rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago and all muscular weakness and stiffness. 25c, 50c and $1.00. Sold by Moro Pharmacy.

How, indeed?

Mrs. H.—"My husband simply won't listen to her. He—How the deuce does the lucky fellow manage it?" is something we hear or read about every day of our lives. Burns or scalds either slight or serious are bound to happen in your family; be prepared by having a bottle of Ballard's Snow Lintment handy. It relieves the pain instantly and quickly heals the burn. Sold by Moro Pharmacy.

Terribly Scalded.

Swindler.

Agriculture is now and will for a long time remain the principal source of wealth in Brazil.

Poison On Poisoning.

Ballard's Snow Lintment cures it. Mr. O. H. P. Cornelius, Turner, Oregon, writes: "My wife has discovered that Snow Lintment cures poison oak poisoning—a very painful trouble. She not only cured a case of it on herself, but one of two of her friends who were poisoned by the same ivy. Price 25c, 50c, and $1.00. Sold by Moro Pharmacy."

Inspiration.

Admirer—You were inspired when you wrote that? Poet—Yes, with the hope of selling it.—Lippincott's.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing household all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day you will keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy can always be depended upon. For sale by all druggists.

Perpetual Snow Line.

The level of perpetual snow is 2,400 feet in Norway, 4,000 in the British Isles and 15,300 at the equator.

During the summer months mothers of young children should watch for any unusual looseness of the bowels. When given prompt attention at this time serious trouble may be avoided. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy can always be depended upon. For sale by all druggists.
