Jenny Goddes of Scotland, who threw her shoes at her parson because he didn't preach to her taste is revived by the Scotch magistrate who threw hers at a magistrate who enforced the law against a feminine hoodlum seeking to secure votes for British women by lawless means. The wisdom of a woman who throws herself into a cause may be questioned, but not the zeal of her who also adds her sole.

Mr. Bryan raises onions in Texas and oranges in Florida. A more interesting question is what he will raise in Washington.

President Taft's last message will review what the government departments have accomplished during the past year; a pleasing task and cheerful topic.

The Turks were supplied with some wooden bullets. Makers of Connecticut nutmegs must have been among the Turkish military contractors.

Don't label your butter with a rubber stamp; it is strictly against the law.

Editor D. C. Ireland of the Sherman County Observer, died at his home in Moro the evening of January 7th, 1913, at seven o'clock of cerebral hemorrhage of an artery of the brain, resulting in paralysis of the limbs and body which his weakened heart action could not withstand.

Mr. Ireland's last sickness dates from December 6, 1912. During the past year he has been very weak, tho' apparently in good health, causing him to forego his usual annual vacation trip to the home of his son and daughter in Portland and it was with difficulty he was persuaded to remain at home, as he considered that he was needed at the office. His last visit there and work performed being only three weeks and three days before the final summons came; while the last piece of "copy" written was that acknowledging the cream "Gypsy" had sent as a Christmas present.

Christmas night intense pain in the abdomen necessitated four hours of attention by Dr. W. C. Nason before relief was obtained; after that Mr. Ireland seemed to improve until Sunday night, January 5th, when he suffered a partial paralytic stroke at eight o'clock followed by nearly a complete attack at four o'clock Monday morning. From that time he gradually grew worse, but with so little outward symptoms that the close approach of death was not realized until Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Ireland retained all the faculties of his mind, except for brief intervals, until within less than three hours of his passing away. His was a genial, generous, sunny disposition; he was a kind father; he always tried to interest his fellow men in the better and more material objective of life; even the suffering of dumb animals always brought a responsive sympathetic attempt at relief.

Funeral services were held at the Moro Methodist Episcopal church; the edifice being crowded; county court was adjourned and the schools dismissed to allow attendance at the services; Rev. C. W. Johnson preaching the sermon.

D. C. Ireland was born July 4th, 1836, at Rutland, Vermont; moved to Indiana when a boy and was educated at an Episcopal church private school, there being no public schools at that time. He learned the printing trade in Mishawaka, Indiana, while attending school; afterwards working at that trade with Schuyler Goffax, later vice president under U. S. Grant, at South-Bend, Indiana, where he assisted Mr. Goffax prepare the first Rebecca, I.O.G.F., ritual.

His first business enterprise was the establishment of the Mishawaka, Indiana, Free Press which is still published at that city and the first copy of which is still retained in the family; later he worked with the world famous editors of those days: Horace Greeley on the New York Tribune and Wilber F. Story on the Detroit Free Press; representing Mr. Story at the first republican convention held at Charleston, South Carolina, before the war.

Mr. Ireland came to Oregon in 1861, across the plains, by ox team and set up the first job press, at The Dalles Mountaineer office, ever used in the then Oregon country, east of the Cascades. He established the Oregon City Enterprise in 1866; the Astoria Astorian in 1873; the Astoria Pioneer in 1887; the Portland Express in 1891; and has, by purchase, conducted newspapers in several different sections of Oregon; he was a potential employee of the Portland Oregonian in the early days of Oregon journalism, antedating the services of its famous editor, H. W. Scott, and assisted in securing Mr. Scott's services as editor. He was an active member of the Episcopal church and was identified with its early Oregon struggle, until his establishment in Moro removed him from that denominational church circle.

DeWitt Clinton Ireland is survived by a son, Alba, living in Chicago; a son, DeWitt L., Sydney, Australia; a son, Francis C., Portland; a daughter, Mrs. G.L. Rohr, Portland; a son, Clinton L., Moro.

The family desire to sincerely thank all who so kindly assisted them in their hour of trouble; the people of Moro are of very kindly impulse; more assistance was offered than could be accepted; we have noticed that is the dominate thought of each in Moro when affliction visits a home, even of strangers "within our gates."

Sunday School Class Social.

At the close of a very close and interesting attendance contest between the boys and the girls of the young peoples class of the Presbyterian Sunday School, the two sides being known as the Reds and Blues the Omikrons of the school held a banquet and social at the Dorcas rooms Monday evening.

This contest was begun the 15th of September. The Omikrons at that time dividing into two divisions, one wearing the blue ribbon and the other the red ribbon. The contest was to see which side could make the most points by January 1st, 1913. Present at Sunday School one Sunday counting 5, and absence taking off 4 points.

It was agreed that the side losing should tender the other side a reception. When the totals were announced Sunday December 28th it was found that the Reds had 500 points and the Blues 504 points. Accordingly the Reds entertained.

Each contestant guest invited a friend and the resulting throng was a considerable and a merry one. When the doors were opened at about 8 o'clock a long table was spread ready for the "feed." There were about forty plates. All were seated at the table when the following program was rendered:

Song, "Happy Greeting to All." Address of Welcome by Netah Martin, leader of the Reds. Response by Ben Tomlin, leader of the Blues, following this was a Song, the Reds and Blue. Report of the class work by the teacher, F. E. Egan. Song, the Reds and Blue united. After the program supper was eaten and the remainder of the evening was spent in playing games. All then departed for their several homes, the winners and their guests sincerely thanking their hosts for the excellent manner in which their "wager" was paid.
