Notwithstanding all the warnings by the press, by automobile clubs, and by the railroads, scarcely a week passes that some automobilist does not try to beat a train at a crossing. We don't know what the railroads can do more than they have done to prevent such foolhardiness as this. A state law requiring the driver to stop his automobile at every crossing might help, but even a state law cannot put a stop to the insane desire of some automobilists to run right into death at every opportunity.
