The Wonders of America

By T. T. MAXEY

THE MISSOURI BOTANICAL GARDEN.

IN 1840 Henry Shaw, a citizen of St. Louis, a lover of nature and of flowers in particular, built a large country residence near the city limits. He surrounded it with flowers and plants of every known variety. When he died in 1850, his will provided for a board of trustees to manage the garden and left sufficient funds to support it. This wonderful floral park, said to be the largest in the world, was thus preserved for the education, admiration and enjoyment of all.

It contains a collection embracing 150 species of palms; a varied collection of tropical and sub-tropical plants; a collection of the 35 known species of cycads; a wonderful assortment of plants which grow best under desert conditions; numerous species of ferns and allied plants; a great array of plants of great economic value and displays of plants that feed on insects; species of the pineapple and its relatives; numerous showy, flowering plants, while in the private orchid house a representative of each of the 800 species of this beautiful flower is to be found.

The out-door collection includes a water garden, several hundred varieties of roses, numerous species of herblike plants, a rare pansy display, a variety of economic plants and trees and shrubs, native to North America and grouped in families. All told, about eleven thousand species of plants are growing in this garden. The body of Mr. Shaw reposes in a handsome mausoleum within the grounds.

The Watchword - "Safety"

The person with a modest surplus should be as much concerned with its safe and judicious investment as the one with a large sum.

Diligence must be exercised so that the hard-earned, carefully-saved funds do not go to swell the already bulging pockets of unscrupulous schemers.

Our Certificates of Deposit—characterized not only by absolute safety, but stabilized income and quick convertibility—recommend themselves. Bank of Moro, Moro, Oregon.

To the Voters of Sherman County, Oregon.

If nominated and elected I pledge to give my best and careful attention, in the future as in the past, to the business conduct of this office.
