Soldier Bonus Law Operating

Offices for the administering of the soldiers bonus law were opened in Portland this week, with Captain Brumbaugh in charge. The work of assembling an office force is now under way, and consideration of application for loans and bonuses probably will begin within the next ten days or two weeks. The offices of the soldiers aid commission adjoins the headquarters of the adjutant-general. The latter office is in possession of the war record of all men who served from Oregon, thereby simplifying the work of the secretary of the commission.

The first work of the commission, following organization of its office, will be to appoint abstractors in the various counties of the state.

Henkle Family 15th Annual Reunion

The 15th annual meeting of the Henkle association was held July 2d at the home of Mrs. Melissa Henkle Wyatt, two miles west of Corvallis, when more than 100 members assembled under a big tent. Features of the day were a basket dinner, a business meeting and a musical program.

Of interest each year is the attendance of members from distant states. Last year Mrs. Mary Ann Hoover and daughter, Miss Ella, from Bedford, Iowa, were present, while this year Mr. and Mrs. Frank Green and family from Clearfield, of the same state, were in attendance, and Mrs. J. C. McArthur of East Helena, Mont.

A. J. Henkle, living at Moro with his daughter, Mrs. A. C. Thompson, is honorary president of the association. On May 27th he celebrated his 93rd birthday.

The secretary of the association reported 905 names enrolled in the record book, with 109 members dead. The historian reported 11 births, five deaths and nine marriages within the association last year.

A Nifty Water Pump

Chris Anderson this week installed a Vicken half inch pump, purchased from Moro Hardware & Implement Company with which to furnish water to irrigate his lawn and put water into the farm watering troughs during the hot harvest weather. This is in addition to his regular water supply and cistern reserve maintained at his farm. The pump is driven by a 1 1/2-hp Z engine also sold by the same company and which will later be used for other farm purposes. To one not acquainted with the possibilities of the Vicken pump its work is surprising. Chris says any one interested in cheap pumping of water should see this one at work, as it is "the slickest little thing you ever saw."

"The U. P. Trail"

"The U. P. Trail," a Hodkinson release, which is coming to the Moro Theatre Tuesday, July 19 is the latest photoplay production of Benjamin B. Hampton, the pioneer maker of pictures from great novels. This, the photoplay version of Zane Grey's most powerful romance, is admitted to be the producers most viril drama.

Mr. Hampton was the pioneer of this type of production and his latest drama proves that he remains unique in his ability to produce great pictures that carry to the screen the underlying motive, the balance, the finish, the powerful sweep of great novels. Critical analysis of "The U. P. Trail" shows that the appeal of this work lies in the mighty virility of it, the vigorous humanness, the scorn of sham. It stands out, by its strength and fearlessness, by the intensity of its drama, by the sweet nobility of its romance. The hand of the master craftsman is seen throughout, from the selection of colorful material available in the novel to the clear, strong wording of the titling and assembling of the complete film. The selection of actors, the art expressed in wonderful scenic settings, the perfection of technical details all bear the impress of his constructive ability. The wonderful romance of the story, combination of dramatic tension, glamor of achievement, warmth of love and mighty heartplay of human emotions, places "The U. P. Trail" at the top of Mr. Hampton's list of successes, and among the few great photoplays of all time.

The handling of the production is especially remarkable in that it has been developed into a photoplay which is not only crowded with breathless action, but which is also convincingly human; which has a colorful appeal of the most romantic time, place and period in the history of America and yet is of all places, at all times, and all periods. A work that has, in short, the quality of universality. The ancient Romans and the Barbarians who destroyed Rome would enjoy "The U. P. Trail" could they have seen it, as greatly as the aristocrat and the laborer of today. It is true romance and true romance is universal.

"An Old Fashioned Boy"

David Warrington, who has old fashioned ideas of love, marriage and home, awkwardly proposes to his sweetheart, Betty Graves, a country girl, who is a bit of a snob. His proposal accepted, Dave announces that he has built a bungalow unbeknown to Betty, on the assumption that she would surely marry him.

In Dave's machine they visit the bungalow, Betty believing the expedition simply a house-hunting one. Learning, however, that Dave had built the house for her, she accuses him of taking her acceptance too much for granted, and peevishly returns home. Dave, in despair, pictures his future life that of a lonely bachelor.

In the meantime, Sybil and Herbert have quarreled and Sybil asks Dave to secretly shelter her three children from her husband. Dave agrees, and with the kiddies for companions he forgets his troubles with Betty. A "tuffy-pull" and over eating by the children results in their illness and Dave summons Betty's father, Dr. Graves, who arrives with Betty and one of her admirers, Ferdie. Dave, desiring to affect a reconciliation with Betty, requests her father to quarantine the house for black measles so that Betty will be compelled to remain. The doctor, favoring Dave as a son-in-law, agrees.

That night Herbert calls and Dave, fearing he will discover the children, attempts to send him away, pretending he has the measles. Herbert, however, enters the house, heading for the bedroom where the children are sleeping. Dave closes the door as Herbert is about to enter, thus arousing Herbert's suspicions. At Dave's request, Herbert seeks Betty and Ferdie, who are quietly breaking quarantine. Dave hides the kiddies in the tonneau of Ferdie's car, parked in front of the house.

Herbert approaches him on his return, even more suspicious on failing to locate Betty and Ferdie in the house. Sybil arrives to see her three children. She spots the quarantine sign on the door and believing the youngsters to be seriously ill, dashes into the house. Dave is the object of greater suspicion when Sybil walks from the bedroom into the presence of Herbert, demanding Dave to produce her children.

Betty and Ferdie, having escaped, arrive in town. The youngsters are found in the tonneau of the car and Betty requests Ferdie to return to Dave's house with them. As she arrives at the house, Herbert is heard declaring that he intends to divorce his wife and name Dave co-respondent in the suit. Sybil, in turn, declares that Dave will have to marry her if Herbert wins a decree. Betty's innate love for Dave is stirred when she hears another woman planning to marry him. She enters the house with the kiddies, clears Dave of suspicion, wins back his love and effects a reconciliation between Herbert and Sybil.
