March term of the circuit court adjourned Tuesday evening. The usual number of court orders in cases pending were disposed of by Judge Parker and one case tried by jury. This was one of the three indictments against Walter Givens, former manager of the Kent Elevator Co., charging conversion of wheat in storage. The defense closed their side of the case without placing a witness on the stand, relying on cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution. The jury was out an hour and twenty-eight minutes, returning a verdict of not guilty after the third ballot. By mutual consent the second indictment was dismissed and action on the third was put off until next term of court.
