CALLS FOR CAREFUL WORK

"Miners" Who Dig for Specimens of Extinct Animals for Museums Must Be Experts.

Few persons contemplating the remarkable specimens of extinct animals to be seen in some museums realize the amount of work which has been detailed in the uncovering and preparation of these specimens. In the first place, a well-equipped expedition is generally sent out to look for these bones, and many miles are sometimes covered in the search of a likely spot for operations. Even then tons of sand are carefully moved often without uncovering the bones that are being sought.

The removal of the soil can be done only by those who are familiar with the work, for much damage had could readily do to proceed. When a bone has been located it is uncovered slowly by the aid of small brushes and delicate implements. The bones when found are exceedingly brittle and must be handled with the greatest of care. When they are finally brought to light they are given a coat of shellac and then placed in a bath of flour paste.

They are then carefully wrapped in strips of fabric and put in boxes. When the latter are placed in crates for shipment the smaller boxes are surrounded with cotton and other material to prevent any possibility of damage being done to the specimens.

CASE OF REAL FRIENDSHIP

Old Maid's Philosophy Might Be Disputed, but She Was Undoubtedly a True "Chum."

The young principal of a Hooster school had to borrow some money in a hurry or some of his debtors would notify the school board of his indebtedness to them. He went to a bank and was told it would be all right if one of the teachers of his building would go his security. He went to the oldest and most faithful one in the building.

While they were talking, the principal's young wife, resident in fine raiment, with her best friend, the mayor's wife, came through the room on her way to her husband's office. She gave the teacher a condescending nod and told her husband she wished to see him in his office. With an apology on his lips the young fellow followed the snobby wife.

For a minute the little old maid hesitated, then she signed the note, and started one of the pupils toward his office before another snubbing from his wife would make the work of indorsing that note harder. "After all, a friend should be more loyal than even a wife," she argued to herself. Indianapolis News.

And Wife.

This story concerns a certain public official prominent in Marion county political life who recently became a bridegroom and went on a honeymoon journey to the South.

The man and his young bride stopped at a hotel in a Florida city and as he proceeded to the hotel register she waited several paces in his rear. It seemed to him that some one had announced to the bellboy, the porter, the clerk and every one about that he was just married, for they waited and watched eagerly. He wrote something and started toward his wife.

"Haven't you forgotten something, sir?" the clerk asked.

The husband turned quickly, sized up the situation in his mind hurriedly and with a snap of his finger, characteristic of him, he said:

"By dad, I most certainly have."

With that he returned to the register and to his own name, which he already had written he added "and wife." Indianapolis News.

WORD MAKES A DIFFERENCE

Controversy at Philadelphia is a Case in Point, and There Have Been Many Others.

In the case of a Philadelphia woman who served as a stenographer in France during the war, and has since passed away, the government has declined to refund a tax payment of $86.84 made by her estate, on the ground that she was not "in" but merely "with" the military forces in France. Much depends on a single word, the Philadelphia Public Ledger says.

There are many historic instances of controversy over a word. Goldwin Smith said the Civil war was fought on a point of grammar—whether it should be "the United States is" or "the United States are." Church councils in the Middle ages were "by schisms rent asunder" over the use of the word "Eloque" in the creed, and there are similar divergences over other terms.

"Via" the beginning was the word, and that word, the Greek word "Eloque" in the creed, and there are similar divergences over other terms.

TURN ME OVER

It Does Look Just Like It.

Charles was spending his first vacation of his five years' existence with his parents at the lake. The wind came up one night, and the next morning Charles looked out on a lake covered with white-caps. Much excited, he ran into the house to his mother.

"Mother, mother!" he exclaimed "some one threw paper all over the lake last night."
