New Auto Ownership Law Short on Funds

The state emergency board may be called into session early in June to finance the administration of the certificate of automobile ownership law passed by the last legislature.

The legislature of last January and February, which enacted this law, along with scores of other new laws, failed to make any provision whatsoever for financing the administration of the law. This is estimated by Secretary of State Koser to be in the neighborhood of $50,000.

The law contemplates a complete finger printing and Bertillon record of every owner of an automobile in the state, together with a record of all liens against all motor vehicles owned by residents of Oregon. Transfers of all motor vehicles must also be made a matter of record, but a charge of $1 is made for the recording of transfers. The law was sponsored by the state motor association and is designed, among other things, to facilitate the recovery of stolen cars.

The Oregon farmers' educational and co-operative union closed its annual convention at Corvallis with the resolution of all its present officers and the passing of a number of resolutions concerning particularly the subject of taxes.
