part of a delegation that waited on the county court Wednesday asking that a new road be made from about the Barnett place north of Wasco northwest to a junction with the hill road north of the Richelidorfer place.

This would eliminate two bad heavy grades and permit easier wheat hauling into Wasco. The court promised to start proceedings as soon as possible. The new road will not be added to what is known as the market road system of the county.

nett Sr. as they were entering Wasco Mrs. Jones was bruised about the face and fingers and one of the children had a small scalp wound.

Both cars were badly wrecked. The Jones proceeded on to Shaniko by stage after treatment at Dr. Wonderlick's office.

Vera Kessinger, seven months old daughter of L. C. Kessinger living east of Moro, was brought to the office of Dr. Wonderlick Tuesday suffering apparently from an attack of infantile paralysis, the right arm being affected. Dr. Morse was also consulted by the parents of the little sufferer the same day. Late Tuesday evening symptoms of meningitis developed, causing the death of the baby at about 2 a. m. Wednesday morning.

That the holiday season has curtained lumber activities is shown by the weekly report that 99 mills reporting to West Coast Lumbermen's association for the week ending December 26, manufactured 55,797,466 feet of lumber; sold 69,590,487 feet and shipped 74,544,970 feet.

The personal support of Major-General Taylor, chief of army engineers, was assured for the proposed deepening and widening of the Columbia river channel from Portland to the sea in the course of a conference in Washington, D. C., between General Taylor and Senator McNary.

Charles Harlon McClane, eight-pound boy, born at Salem Friday morning to Mr. and Mrs. Harlon Mc-Clane, has made claim to a complete wardrobe offered by Salem merchants in conjunction with the Capital Journal for the first baby born in Marion and Polk counties in the year 1926.

Twice as many students were dropped from the University of Oregon at Eugene for poor scholarship in the fall term as ever before, according to an announcement by the registrar. Ninety-six students failed at the end of the fall term. Seventy-five of this number were men and 21 were women.

Business of the Crosset-Western company at Waukena during the past year showed encouraging activity, with a payroll of approximately $1,000,000, 76,000,000 feet of timber cut in the logging camps, 61,000,000 feet sawed at the mill and shipments totaling 900 carloads, representing 1,630,000 sales.

No, Sir! I never said I would marry that girl!

To all men and women who were "over there" "What Price Glory" recalls the most thrilling pages of their lives, and to the millions of others it brings the satisfaction of hunger that is at last appeased. For they have hungered to know—and now they know.

From the very opening scene in the first act, in headquarters of Company L of the Marines in a nameless village in France, until Sergeant Quirt in pajamas hobbles out of the saloon of Pete de la Cognac, screaming at the man he hates with all the strength of his bowels and whom he curses with the fluency of an enemy bred in the Boxer uprising, suckled in Cuba, and which reached manhood in Nicaragua and erupted with volcanic violence in France—Sergeant Quirt yells, "Flag, damn you, wait for me, I'm coming. You can't get into this fight without me."

And Quirt hobbles through the door way and you hear him still profanely yelling to his skipper not to leave him alone—he must get into the fray. It is such human touches as this that make "What Price Glory" one of the greatest plays ever written, and certainly the greatest comedy of war mankind has ever seen to date. You get war at its worst and at its best if there be any such thing as best in war—you have red-blooded men resting back of the line, cursing their inactivity and damning because they are to be thrown back into the caldron again—yet eager for it. Human nature has as many sides as the facets of a diamond, and it took a brilliant brain, the understanding sympathetic soul and the big heart with the milk of human kindness within it, of a man who left a leg behind him in Belleau Woods to conceive "What Price Glory". Long after Captain Laurence Stallings is dead, "What Price Glory" will live and it will be enjoyed as much half a century hence as it is today. Its very truthfulness, its comedy, its ironic humor its underlying horror, its every appeal are so real, so human, that it is impossible to resist it.

There are five companies playing "What Price Glory" in the East to capacity houses. Out here on the west coast, Louis O. Macloon has a company playing in Los Angeles and the one which has just closed its brilliant engagement at the Curran theater, San Francisco, where it could have run indefinitely had not previous bookings prevented, will be seen at the Auditorium, The Dalles on Sunday, January 10, 1926.

The cast of thirty artists many of whom were members of the A. E. F. is headed by that brilliant player, Emmett Corrigan.
