Picture Show News For The Current Week

Milton Sills, film hero, steps again out of the camera's eye onto the screen with the latest First National drama, "I Want My Man." In this appearance Sills is co-featured with Doris Kenyon and supported by a cast which includes Phillip Haver, May Allison, Paul Nicholson, Kate Bruce and others.

Film fans will find an interesting contrast between Sills' notable role in "The Sea Hawk" and his characterization in "I Want My Man." The latter is that of a war blinded soldier who returns cured after eight years in France to find this country steeped in a mania of pleasure chasing.

"I Want My Man" was adapted from the novel, "The Interpreter's House," by Struthers Burt. It was produced for First National under the supervision of Earl Hudson and was directed by Lambert Hillyer.

It is so seldom that a picture possesses that indefinable something called "charm" that it is a genuine delight to recommend "Bright Lights." It is not a spectacle in any sense, though possessing many beautiful sets and some gems of photographic art. It concerns itself with the five or six people in the story, and by the end of the picture they seem like old friends. It is one of those pictures that make you want to know what happened after the final fadeout, rather than trying to beat the crowd out of the door.
