FARM RADIO MAKES RAPID GROWTH IN U. S.

There are nearly 1,000,000 radio sets on farms in the United States, the department of agriculture estimates in a report on farm radio during the past five years.

In some states, the department says, there are radio sets on 25 to 40 per cent of all farms. Estimates made by the department in 1923 showed 145,000 sets in use on farms at that time; 365,000 sets in 1924, and 593,000 sets early in 1925.

Increased power and improved broadcasting, together with better receiving sets, the department believes, will do much to aid in establishing the permanency of radio for the benefit of agriculture.

One station alone in a period of three months broadcasting of market and weather reports received more than 3,000 letters of commendation from farmers, country banks, shippers of livestock, and small merchants in the towns in 12 agricultural states surrounding the station.

Interference among stations may gradually be eliminated, the department believes, as many of the less active stations are being discontinued, and technical improvements are being made in both broadcasting and receiving equipment. Of 1,458 radio stations of all sizes licensed to broadcast since broadcasting began, only 536 were active on January 1st of this year.

The department has made cooperative arrangement with more than 100 stations for broadcasting official market news gathered by department representatives in leading shipping and consuming areas. Since the first of the year the department has made arrangements with about 60 stations to broadcast on a regular schedule four additional services dealing with general agricultural information.

Literally hundreds of stations have requested the privilege of handling the government reports, but many of the requests have had to be refused the department says, because the stations are remote from the department's market news branch offices.

"When the experimental radio market news service was announced on December 21, 1920," the report states:

those in the department of agriculture who were directing the new activity hardly anticipated the wonderful possibilities of radio broadcasting as we now know it. A laboratory transmitter at the United States bureau of standards on a 400 meter wave length, a few enthusiastic amateurs within a hundred miles of Washington, and a 5 p. m. schedule of about 500 words by radio telegraph, composing what was called the 'radio marketgram,' constituted the elements of the experiment. The idea was that the amateurs would copy the marketgram and turn it over to the newspapers in their own towns or give copies to the banks or stores to be posted on bulletin boards. In every way it was kind of a laboratory experiment.

"The practical results of this first experiment could hardly be called conclusive, but they gave encouragement to those in charge of it to push on in the quest of more and more evidence. On April 7, 1921, an announcement was made that arrangements had been completed with the Air Mail Radio Service of the Post Office department to transmit by 'wireless' market reports several times a day from post office stations at Washington, D. C., Bellefonte, Penn., St. Louis, Mo., and Omaha, Nebraska.

"Assuming the effective radius of audibility of 300 miles about each station, licensed amateurs in the areas covered were enlisted to copy the reports and to furnish them to shipper's associations, county agents, state bureaus of markets, farm bureaus and other agricultural agencies, banks, newspapers, and local telephone exchanges. A number of licensed operators offered to copy the reports. By January 1, 1922, the market reports were being relayed and broadcast by radio telegraph from seven post office stations in a chain across the country.

"During 1921, reports were furnished to three of the then very few radio telephone broadcasting stations. Since then, the service has grown by leaps and bounds until now there is practically no agricultural community in the country that is without official market reports on agricultural commodities. Well-established schedules of weather, crop and market reports are broadcast from more than 100 stations in all parts of the country.

Farmers, of necessity, the department says, have bought mainly high-priced sets capable of getting distant stations. The average cost of radio sets on more than 1,000 farms widely scattered over the country in 1923 was estimated by the department at $175. Better and more easily operated equipment can be bought now for half this amount, the department says.

An authentic list of broadcasting stations the country over that broadcast market and crop reports has been prepared by the department for free distribution. Requests for the list should be mailed to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Ancient Paved Streets

Paved streets are said to date from the early Carthaginians, and came into use in Rome in Augustus' time. In England they were not common until the reign of Henry VII in the sixteenth century.

Wanted to Be Sure

"How dare you, with your scandalous past, propose to me? It wouldn't take much for me to throw you down stairs and turn the dogs on you!" "Am I to take that as a refusal, then?" -Secutek (Lemberg).
