In Little Old New York
A Broadway trolley conductor has listened to a loud tirade against his refusal to stop at an odd-numbered street and was silent until the irate lady was well off his car at Fifty second street, still scolding. Then he turned to the inside of the car, made a bow and called out clearly: "Ladies and gentlemen, I have the honor to announce that the next stop will be at Fiftieth street."—The New Yorker

SKAGGS DISTRIBUTION WITHOUT WASTE THE POWER OF PURPOSE

The fixed determination of the leaders of Skaggs Stores and Safeway Stores — while operating separately — to ultimately find the most effective method for getting goods from producer to consumer with the least possible waste, naturally and inevitably led to the consolidation of the resources, operating and ideals of these two great food distributing concerns.

Their union is the most constructive move — in the interest of the consumer — ever attempted in the West. With the purchasing power of more than 900 retail units, annual sales of approximately $60,000,000, operating costs lower than any other similar retail food concern in the United States and an organization of nearly 3500 earnest, sincere and highly-trained people behind them, Skaggs-Safeway Stores are rendering consumers a service of saving incomparably greater than would be possible were they operating as individual stores or a smaller chain.

Hereafter people have a right to expect that Skaggs-Safeway Stores will lead in the march of progress; that they shall offer only merchandise of definitely known high quality; that they shall carry the most complete stocks and the widest varieties; that their stores shall represent the utmost in cleanliness and convenience and that Skaggs-Safeway men shall render the most efficient, courteous and helpful service it is humanly possible to render.

To all of those things Skaggs-Safeway Stores unhesitatingly pledge themselves — realizing that our success depends upon your confidence in us and your confidence depends upon our ability to make good. We offer the following items as instances of the super-values you will regularly find at all of our stores.
