May & Son To The Front

Popular Local Concern Adopts
Modern Method of Publicity.

Attention this week is called to the advertisement of May & Son, grocers. These up to the minute merchants have contracted with the Western Advertisers Association of Omaha, Nebraska to furnish their weekly advertising copy, featuring the nationally famous grocery character "Atta Boy Eddie."

This comic little character drawn by Doc Bird Finch, cartoonist on The Daver Post is a cheerful happy individual whose middle name is "Service." He is on the job every minute with a smile and in his little jingles and talks on store merchandising is acquainting our readers with the high class service and honest dealing for which May & Son is noted.

They believe it is not enough merely to sell a good product at a right price. The customer must be treated as a member of their happy and progressive business family. There must be fairness and friendliness in every transaction. The virtue of business relationship does not rest in the product alone but in the character and policies of the house that makes or sells it. Customers want more than good value. They want to take pleasure and pride in their relations with those from whom they buy.

Rescue Stunt In Picture

A picture made for everyone's delight is "A Regular Scout," an F. B. O. production starring Fred Thompson which is playing at the Moro theatre, Friday only. The Boy Scout Organization has a universal appeal; it interests men, women and children everywhere because it is to be found everywhere. And the Thompson brand of Western pictures has one of the greatest audiences in the country, so very naturally the merging of these two tremendously interesting factors must create a picture which is the essence of perfect entertainment. Seven troops of Boy Scouts under the guidance of Edward B. De Groot, Scout Executive, take part in the picture. Silver King, of course, is one of the outstanding features, and Fred has a new rescue stunt that has never been shown on the screen before. It selfless in daring and novelty anything that Fred has attempted and proves to be a thriller of the first degree. The picture was made under the direction of David Kirkland who also made the continuity from the story by B. F. Oxford. The cast includes: Olive Hasbrouck, Mary Carr, Margaret Seddon, Buck Black, T. Roy Barnes, Harry Woods, Bob McKim, William Courtwright.

Receives $100 Each Month

Frank W. Woolley, the well known insurance man, spent the night and part of last Friday in Moro. The main exhibit of Mr. Woolley on this trip was photos of checks recently paid to Mr. Steve Connelley, the big sheep man of the Mitchell country, to a total amount of some $2,500, the waiver of a premium and disability payment made retroactive on a policy written by Mr. Woolley November 5, 1924, and paid to Mr. Connelley because of his continued illness from an attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

While Mr. Connelley is suffering this affliction, he is enjoying great pleasure in receiving the $100 per month which leaves the Massachusetts office of the life insurance company the 13th of each and every month and which will continue as long as he may live with dividends each year and no premiums to pay. Should he die at any time, the Massachusetts Mutual will pay full face of the policy to his widow or heirs as the case may be.

Advertising

All progressive merchants advertise these days, and so do many professional people.

Merchants simply have to advertise to be progressive. They have found that advertising pays.

But some of them would be more progressive if they'd advertise consistently. They advertise when business is good, of course. But they decrease their advertising or eliminate it altogether when business is not good.

This is just the opposite of what should be the case. The time to advertise is not when business is not good. That's the way to make it good again—to advertise.

John Wannamaker made millions as a retail merchant. Of newspaper advertising he said: "When the times are hard and people are not buying its the very time that advertising should be heaviest. You want to get the people in to see what you have to sell, and you must advertise to do that. When the times are good they will come largely of their own accord, but I believe in advertising all the time. I never stop advertising."

The Cost Of An Egg

The cost of producing commercial eggs and factors influencing this cost is being surveyed by the Oregon experiment station. The purpose is to determine what factors have a major influence on cost and how these can be controlled to reduce it.

This study is to be carried on for three years, and is to cover approximately 150 farms on which commercial egg production is a major enterprise. The facts as recorded in the field records are now being compiled by the department of farm management and a progressive report of preliminary findings will be available early in the fall.

A collection of 140 records was obtained in the winter months by A. S. Burrier, assistant in farm management, and F. L. Knowlton, poultry husbandman. Each of these records was obtained by a personal interview with a farm operator and covers a complete record of his poultry expenses and receipts and poultry management practices. The records were taken on farms selected with the assistance of leading poultrymen and county agricultural agents, and are believed to be representative of conditions throughout the regions covered.

The sections covered include Deschutes and Umatilla counties in eastern Oregon, Clatsop and Columbia counties in the Columbia river valley, all Willamette valley counties and Douglas county. A shortage of time available for field work forced an omission of the Rogue river valley counties this year, but it is planned to include both Jackson and Josephine in the next two years.

The amount of moisture and plant food available for newly germinated grains is largely determined by the type of tillage used in preparing the seed bed, the Oregon experiment station points out. The tillage system for eastern Oregon and western Oregon are different but both call for moisture conservation sometime between germination and maturity.

If there were any way of arriving at an accurate survey of the causes of woodland fires it might very well be found that more of them are due to careless motorists than to careless fishermen and hunters. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of burning cigar and cigarette ends are thrown from passing automobiles every day with no thought of their landing place. A single act of negligence like that may be responsible for a most disastrous fire.

Whenever an inconsequential statesman turns up somewhere in Europe and looks around the railroad station for a floral arch and a reception committee, we shall always remember that the peerless Lindbergh took along letters of introduction.

Of course, there were the White mountains and the Blue Ridge mountains to mention Greenland, for the President to choose from. But he favored a conservative color suggestion and selected the Black hills.

A New York physician advises to brush your teeth before you kiss and rub listerine on your lips after the occasion. That's a lot of bother for those who have been advised in "Scoutful Lady" to "kiss until the cows come home."

It would save some heartburnings if the competitors in the national an them writing contest would remember that very few great songs have been written to order or without the inspiration of an especial occasion.

On the theory that people like variety in the White House, the Toledo Blade suggests the possibility of an other President with whiskers, at least one of that type heretofore has been a successful success.

In spite of reductions in income tax rates, payments for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, increased more than $245,000,000 over total for previous year.

Trout For Deschutes River

Oak Springs Trout Hatchery Has Two Million Trout in Feeding Ponds

The Maupin Times last week stated that the Oak Springs trout hatchery, located on the Deschutes river close to Maupin, has at the present time 774,000 fingerling rainbow trout in the feeding ponds and is holding in the hatching troughs an additional 1,710,000 trout which will be placed in a large feeding pond, now under construction, just as soon as the new pond is completed.

The new feeding pond will have a size of 30x40 feet and will be 3 1/2 feet deep. Additional pipe will be laid from the existing trough through water will be conveyed to the new pond. The trout, recently hatched, will be held with the first hatch, until they are at least eight inches in length. At present the total number of trout in troughs and ponds at the hatchery number 1,845,000, quite a supply for the benefit of anglers who prefer the Deschutes as a fishing stream.

With the coming of spring next year the trout on hand will have attained a size sufficiently large to enable them to protect themselves when released. When trout are turned into the river as soon as hatched, but a very small percentage survive, but when they are allowed to grow strong and fleet they are able to escape the onslaughts of larger fish. These trout will be held until they are from eight to ten inches in length.

This season 750,000 trout, many of which had attained a growth of 15 inches were released in the Deschutes, and last season an equal number of other fish were hatched and let go in the waters of the finest trout stream in the world.

Inescapable

Whatever conclusions may be drawn from the recent state election, one is inescapable. The people in rejecting every state-wide measure involving the expenditure of funds obtained from taxation have demanded economy in state government. They have not charged the administration with extravagance, nor have they indicated a belief in the existence of wasteful expenditure, but in their refusal to authorize a new tax and an added rate base, their meaning is plain and needs no clarifying.

Taxes are not popular in Oregon, and under the fancied protection of the six per cent constitutional limitation, the people refuse to approve new avenues of taxation, along with rejection of a proposal to increase property taxes for state purposes. Fearful of the lengths to which officialdom may go, they have declined to approve a legislative measure designed to equalize taxes, a measure that had undoubted merit and fairness, but which might easily have been ruined by over-zealous administration. The plan proposed, and which has been rejected has been applied to public utilities in Oregon for a number of years, with the result that utility companies are paying to the state and its political subdivisions nearly ten per cent of their gross earnings, and subscribing more than their share of the high cost of government.

The legislature, which may not meet until 1929, will have a major problem to solve to extricate the state from a financial situation brought about by the defeat of the income tax in 1924 and a reduction in the state tax levy. Until then the state will be compelled to face continued and increasing deficits, which some time and in some master will have to be paid.

The Road To Yesterday

Firmly convinced that neither cast nor story should be emphasized at the expense of the other, Cecil B. De Mille selected a group of celebrated screen players for his first independent, personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday," fully capable of equalling in quality the remarkable story.

This screen version, a Producers distributing release, will appear on the screen at the Moro theatre on Saturday only.

The story is a stage success of twenty years ago, adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix. It has long been a much-sought-of piece of material, but until recently has been unavailable for picture production because of legal red-tape. In the leading role is Joseph Schildkraut, whose dramatic portrayal of the hero in "The Firebrand" has been one of the stage sensations of New York. Opposite this finished thespian is colorful Jetta Goudal, a prominent member of De Mille's cinema stock company, while Vera Reynolds and William Boyd, also under contract to De Mille, fill the juvenile leads.

Julia Faye, Trixie Friganza, and Cason Ferguson complete the list of featured players collected for this spectacle, which is a daring drama of reincarnation.
