Sure a Star is Made

"ALL GOOD football players are born with it in them. It's the job of the coach, or somebody else, to bring it out."

Coach Lund was in one of his rare talkative moods and the training table crowd settled back for a story.

"Did you ever hear of Carter Hall? Course not, 'cause that's just the name I'm using for one of the best ends the old school ever had. Well, he came to college without ever having played and the makings of a football player and, worse yet, there wasn't a coach or a trainer who could discover anything like talent in his looks. It took a girl—a girl we'll call Maizie—to turn the trick."

This Carter Hall was a studious bird and a bit backward about volunteering where he might not be wanted. His head was so full of his studies and this girl Maizie that he never gave a thought to the team or his making it. Somehow, he couldn't see himself playing football. It was hard work, and most likely, out of his line.

Hall had never met Maizie. Like a lot of other freshmen he knew she was the real queen of the campus and was hoping to get the chance to tip his hat when she sailed by. Why that kid would rather have had a smile from her than a letter on his jersey. He was completely submerged, just coming up for air often enough to say "present" in classrooms. And all the time he was packing around inside his college cuts the muscles of the great-est end—but I said that before.

One day Hall almost bumped into Maizie. She was standing in front of the varsity captain and looking up to his face all full of admiration and soft soap, you know, like a cat what sees a plate of chicken on the window sill. "Oh, Hubert," Hall heard her say, "do you know there is nothing I adore so much as athletic prowess. I like my friends, my men friends, to be big and strong, to play the game bravely and clean." I have an idea those were her very words.

After that Carter Hall showed up for football practice and dug in like he was after an all-American position. Course he was raw at first, but he had speed, could handle forward passes as easy as swatting flies, and had the natural bend for finding a way out when the signaled play went wrong. There was no bumping into a stone wall for that kid. If the line didn't make a hole, he found one. They put him on the scrubs, then the second team, and he tore through the varsity every time he was pulled back and given the ball.

You ought to see him sprint down on the punts and you ought to see the way he turned up in the far places to catch a pass. Say, if I had a couple of fellows like Carter Hall on this team it would be a cinch.

To get back to Maizie and the game, Hall was kept on the training table and didn't get much chance for fussing around in the social life. That's why he couldn't meet the girl, but he didn't care. Told himself he would make his letter first. When he was a football player starting in the big games she would ask to meet him. He knew the kind of men she liked and he was going to pattern himself according.

"Well, he did. He made the first team and if I told you his real name you would know how he carried the ball over for the only touchdown in the big game. You'd know him all right. Walter. Camp knows him and there isn't a big newspaper but hasn't his cut somewhere back in the files of a few years ago.

When the last game was over he knew he was Maizie's kind. It would be all right to speak to her now, he figured, even if there was no other- some bird around to introduce them. Football men have their privileges. He was thinking like this when he saw her.

This time she was talking to a little fellow with heavy glasses and a sort of frightened rabbit look.

"And do you know," says this Maizie, "I envy you intellectual giants. My idea of a man is not the husky brute who wins plaudits on the football field, but the modest student who prepares for the future and arms himself mentally to serve humanity." And she was looking at the little fellow as if she thought he was John W. Philosopher himself.

"And that," concluded Coach Lund, "is how this here Carter Hall became a football player. It was all on account of a girl, although it took him some years to give her the credit."

After the coach had gone the bunch exchanged glances.
"He as an end," one ventured.
"Yes, and the only end who has won a big game in fifteen years. The old boy has been talking about himself and thinks he put it over. I wonder who Maizie was."

Reason for Preference

A Methodist minister moved with his family from a town of 400 to 500 to one of many thousand inhabitants. His son, age ten, could see no advantages in moving, and stoutly insisted that the smaller town was superior.

"Why," he exclaimed, "you ought to see the post office in L—. It has the one here best a long way. There you can get anything you want—groceries and medicines and shoes. But here at the post office all you can get is just letters and stamps!"

Long legs, says a Columbia professor, are a sign of high intelligence. But not when you leave too much of them uncovered.

"Doughboys" is an excellent name, except that they weren't boys and weren't the ones that got the dough. —Austin American.

Why is it, the farmer would like to know, that as soon as a crop starts coming up in the fields it starts going down in the market?
