THE OBSERVER PRINTING OFFICE
IS AN ESTABLISHMENT THAT IS KNOWN
BY THE HIGH GRADE OF ITS PRINTING.

Time is something that flies, and what people buy things on.

In Utopia they use a few eggplants as targets in the shooting galleries.

A Scotchman left the billiard table in his home unused for years because a cue wanted a tip.

What ever became of the old fashioned teamster who would hang his jacket on the hames?

Necking is no new invention. Years ago, however, it was not made the headline act of an outdoor show.

Of course the drastic solution for a seating problem would be to send all hands involved out in a canoe.

The only ambition in life a paper napkin has is to get down off a diner's lap and play on the floor.

A cow's jaw moves 41,000 times in a day. And yet, as far as we know, her vocabulary is limited to one word.

We guess about the nearest you can come to having no home, and still have one, would be setting on a flag pole.

A Chinese war is difficult to understand, inasmuch as its original cause may relate to numerous centuries gone by.

A barn in the West was stolen and moved five miles away. The barn being stolen, it seemed useless to lock the horse.

Well, the porch hammock is up again for the season, across the street, and judging by the sound the arthritis seems worse.

The office cynic never fails to remember his wife's birthday and bring home a big cake, with the right number of candles.

We long ago gave up the attempt to figure what Mr. Shakespeare's royalties would total, if he had copyrighted all the quotations.

Doubtless the end of the solar system is millions and billions of years in the future, but it will arrive inexorably just the same.

A Raleigh newspaper says a Caro lina horse show was largely attended by the younger set—many of their elders having seen a horse.

A zoo scientist died from rattlesnake venom. He made pets of snakes and experienced the usual result of such eccentric trustfulness.

One of our best ideas, at this time, for eliminating all war is to have the advancing lines of skirmishers crawl slowly across a strawberry patch.

A woman in Indiana has brought suit against two aviators who crashed her house on the grounds that they were not invited to drop in on her.

"A typographical error in a treaty," says a lexicographer, "might alter the destiny of the world." And one in a cook book might be worse than that.

"I don't wish to seem critical," remarked the young husband, "but could you leave this pie in the oven a bit longer, for that popular sun-tan effect?"

The wierdest combination in complexion up to date, is a face with a store-bought coat of tan, in front of a neck with a genuine case of sun-burn.

A censor of literature must yield to traditional sentiment and make generous allowance for some of the passages in the writings of Bill Shakespeare.

Now a naturalist says the elephant hasn't a particularly good memory at all. If he had, we guess he would remember to have his trousers pressed.

Although secure in his official prospects, the prince of Wales likes to go about and shake hands just as much as if he were appealing to the public for votes.

Those who are convulsed by this sort of thing might try saying the following over rapidly four or five times, viz.: "Florida fruit fly, Florida fruit fly—"

The prince of Wales brings to English affairs an abundance of popular good will, which is regarded by business doctors as one of the most valuable of assets.

A reckless air pilot who crashes affords another reminder of the strange fact that the phrase "Safety first" has lost its meaning for the average person.

The old-fashioned man who occasionally left a large sum for horse troughs, in his will, has just passed away in Australia and bequeathed $400,000 for that purpose.

"The sounds of almost all musical instruments," says a writer, "have their parallels in nature." We still labor under an impression the saxophone is entirely man's own idea.

"The Explorers' club in New York is moving into its new home." It is hoped that in deference to any mountain climbers on the roster all stairways have been omitted from the structure.

Duty

An Indiana business man who is cranky about his food distressed his wife by setting his cup of coffee in the platter of butter.

"What do you mean by doing a trick like that?" inquired the wife.

"I am only carrying out an injunction of humanity. It's the duty of the strong to support the weak," replied the aggrieved husband.—Indianapolis Star.
