

Tricks of the Trade

By CORONA REMINGTON

"HONEY, the summer folks are startin' to come now and you'll have to take your dip before they get up. City men are awful mean and I don't want you out there when they're in the surf."

"That, daddy," Mary protested, "all the city girls that come here have somebody to go in swimming with them and I'm so lonesome, the girl ended tragically."

"I know it, honey, but those men wouldn't have any good intentions toward a poor fisherman's daughter."

He tried in his crude way to warn her, but it was so difficult. He felt like a stranger in the presence of this beautiful young thing who, only yesterday it seemed, had been a plump, carefree child. Bringing a plump, carefree child to a man's job, anyway.

Mary, on her part, accepted the verdict with poor grace, rose in the morning at five o'clock and went racing down the beach in her little red bathing suit. Once in the water she forgot her grievance and gave herself up to the sport. Her slender figure gleamed in the early morning light and her little red cap rose and fell with the waves. Since the eldest child-hood the sea had been in all its moods and loved it with equal restlessness and intensity. But now a great restlessness had seized her. She wanted a big adventure. She did not share her father's belief that city men were—bad, and watched hopefully each morning for the sight of a masculine head bobbing up and down in the surf.

"If one should ever come and he were to ask to go to my house, then would I do it?" she wondered.

It never once dawned on her that a man might come into the water and make no attempt at the slightest attempt to get acquainted, but that is exactly what happened. It was the second week after the five o'clock schedule had become effective that she saw him, only a few yards away, turning over and over, riding the waves.

He kept entirely to himself. Each morning he appeared, but never a sign did he make. Desperately Mary tried her every fancy stunt in the hope of evoking a word of attention from her fellow swimmer. But this, too, failed. Two one day an idea popped into her mind that almost took her breath away.

"Maybe—if I made believe drown," she thought, "surely he'd rescue me and then he'd have to say something. I'd just do it like this. . ."

She took a long breath and slipped under the water. After she had been under what she considered the proper length of time she reappeared for a fleeting instant, called a feeble "help" and was gone again. In the flash of a second she felt a strong arm around her and soon she was moving through the water toward the beach. Drowning people should keep their eyes closed, she concluded, so she resisted the temptation to look at her rescuer. She permitted her limp figure to be stretched out on the sand and pummeled by the energetic young man. After a while she opened her eyes weakly and saw him leaning over her—his face white with anxiety.

"Gee, I'm glad you're alive," he said. "I was sure you—"

"He's wonderful," she thought and slowly closed her eyes. "Guess I went crazy," she apologized later, as he sat watching her, his sun-burned arms around his knees.

"Reckon you'll think I'm nervous," he said after a moment, "but I've been watching you ever since I came here and—I'd like to be friends. My name's Tom Foster, but that won't mean much to you. Reckon nobody ever heard of me outside my own county in Wyoming. The folks down at the hotel where I stay are all city dudes from the East, and they haven't got any use for me. My mother was paralyzed for three years and I took care of her till she died last winter. I'd always been outside of my own state—so I took part of my savings and came down here. It's the first trip or vacation I ever had in my life."

"I'm glad you aren't a city dude," she said at last. Then she told him of her own home life and of her father's warning.

"Reckon he's right. If you were mine I'd be worried, too," he answered gravely. By tacit consent they met each morning on the beach and played like two children in the water. Each refused to think of the day when Foster must go back to his ranch and he put off his departure again and again. It was on a radiant morning when the sun was just peeping up over the edge of the sea that he forgot his timidity and took her in his arms.

HEIGHT LIMIT OF SKYSCRAPER NEAR

Elevator Demands Make Lofly Towers Unprofitable.

New York.—Where 100,000 men once spent 20 years building a pyramid for the Pharaohs, a thousand men now rear a modern skyscraper 30 stories into the air in a single year. But where the Pharaohs raised their monuments to stand for all time, the life of the modern monument to commerce is fixed at 25 years. Children who watch these lofty towers reaching toward the sky today in New York, Chicago and a score of other cities will, as middle-aged adults, see them leveled again.

The explanation is that the average skyscraper is being built comparatively as cheaply as a subdivision bungalow because the builder cannot afford to take chances on the course of rapidly changing land values as the American city changes its course of growth, points out Silas Bent, chief of the World's Work. They cannot afford to build a skyscraper in a district where the value of the land is expected to change only to find that within 10 or 15 years the district has changed from a commercial to a manufacturing center. They also cannot afford to build a skyscraper in a district where the value of the land is expected to rise many times in value with a building that may be antiquated within a decade.

Whether the 75-story skyscraper soon to be erected in Chicago will mark the ultimate in lofty construction, or whether it will be surpassed by a 110-story tower projected in New York and by others still higher, is a problem interestingly discussed by Mr. Bent.

While theoretically there is no limit to which builders may aspire today, there is a rigid economic limit at which such buildings cease to be profitable, he shows. And the limit is due to one of the chief factors that made the skyscraper possible—the elevator.

"The taller the building, the greater must be the number of elevators to accommodate the tenants," he points out in the World's Work article. "Now where ground rentals are enormous the space given over to elevators becomes an item of moment. In cities of a million population it is about as lofty as is consistent with economic construction. Only where land values are abnormal, or where there is exceptional advertising value in mere height, are more stories justified."

A building so high that it must give a third or half of its ground space over to elevator shafts would necessarily be far more costly than one only two-thirds as high, and not as profitable, he shows. So that unless engineers devise some apparently impossible means of indoor transportation for the tens of thousands of inhabitants, the skyscraper soon will have reached its positive limit.

Former Ghost Town Citizens Hold Reunion

Traver, Calif.—One of California's best known "ghost" towns returned to life here with a population of approximately 500 citizens for one day, when visitors came from as far north as Sacramento and as far south as Los Angeles.

"Citizens" is the proper word to describe the returning population, for all of the 500 persons were former residents, gathered in reunion. It was the 45th anniversary of the founding of Traver, once a 3,000 population center of a great grain and horticultural area.

Every building in the town has disappeared. The last to go was the Del Zante hotel, burned to the ground last year, together with a little store. Alkali was responsible for Traver's demise as a municipality. The chemical came to the surface with irrigation, killing grain, orchards and vineyards.

Cattle now roam over sparse "salt grass" where once a prosperous community existed. The 500 reunionists pickknicked beneath the great eucalyptus trees that border what once was the Traver school yard.

Some people spend more effort trying to appear like what they wish others to think they are than would seem necessary actually to become that way.

Texas Claims Largest Wheat Field, 6,000 Acres

Heresford, Texas.—This section of Texas has issued claim to the largest single wheat field in the state and is shooting at national honors. The field of grain is under a fence and is expected to total about 200,000 bushels of wheat valued at approximately $250,000.

Members of the Oregon supreme court will be on vacation during the month of August and no more opinions will be handed down until some time in September.

Rose Time for Mary

By LAURA R. MONTGOMERY

WHEN Mary got off the night train at the quiet little town of Ellington she went directly to her home. Had her neighbors known that she planned to return, there would have been many invitations extended to the lonely girl who was coming back alone after her trip abroad with her invalid mother.

She had told no one of her coming for she had been too heart-sick to write. She had the instinct of a wounded animal to return to the places she knew; and as she drew in long breaths of the sweet country air, she knew she had done the right thing. The Meddlicott home was at the very outskirts of the village and only near one house, the Smith house, next door, which was empty, with large grounds and many trees about it. Therefore, when Mary set all her doors and windows wide open the next morning there was no one near enough to observe.

She bustled about, hoping to set the place in spotless order before the advent of the neighbors she longed to see and it was nearly ten o'clock before she heard footsteps.

"Why, Mary Meddlicott, why didn't you let us know you were coming home?" A pair of arms thrown warmly about the slim, blue-ginghamed waist aroused her.

"I just came last night," she said. "I knew how good you would be, but I just thought I'd creep in and get it over with alone."

Amundia patted her arm gently. "Well, you shouldn't sleep another night here, alone. I'll be over again to get you for dinner."

"I've been planning all morning and I can't bear to think of going away to teach; I want to be at home and I'm going to open a boarding house."

"The hotel has been closed all winter and the teacher from the village school is looking about now for a place to board next fall—and Mary wondered why her old friend suddenly halted with twinkling eyes and stood as though, thinking, "And what?" asked the girl.

"Nothing," was the evasive reply. "Didn't you feel afraid so far away from the other houses last night?"

Mary shook her head. "You know the Smith's house has the name of being haunted. Did you hear anything?"

"So, I wonder why they don't rent it? It seems a shame for such a fine estate to fall into decay," returned Amundia, a delicate pink staining her smooth cheeks as she recalled the quarrel between the two families. The feud had grown out of a mere trifle. A ball thrown by Mary's little brother had broken a pane of glass in the greenhouse and touched old Mrs. Smith had fussed and nagged until the families were on terms of bitter silence.

Amundia, watching the young face, knew that Mary was thinking of the brown-eyed Frank Smith, who had been a childhood sweetheart.

Mary, her mind a jumble of thoughts, hurried over into the old-fashioned garden and saw the flowers that she had longed for on her trip home. To the east her eyes wandered and fell on the thick row of rose bushes that divided the Meddlicott grounds from the Smiths' estate.

"There, no one has touched those bushes for years," she thought, recalling the old happy times when Frank squeezed through the bushes that he persisted in calling rose trees. "Those branches are growing over and spoiling my hedge. I guess I'll just start right there with my trimming."

Disease Germs Cannot Live in Mother's Milk Scientists have known for some time that babies fed on mother's milk were protected in some mysterious fashion from various diseases such as whooping cough, measles, diphtheria and the like. Now it appears that the mother's milk actually has the power of killing disease germs.

Dr. Friedrich Schlegel, bacteriologist at Bern, Switzerland, has experimented with milk from nursing mothers and found that the milk has this bactericidal power to a very high degree. If the milk is kept at a mean temperature this power may be demonstrated for sixty hours or more. Such bacteria as get into it are at least very much retarded in their development if not actually killed. The milk is even able to destroy bacteria which do not normally occur in it. Boiled milk has not this power. Doctor Schlegel has succeeded in filtering milk, obtaining a clear greenish liquid which contained albumin but no fat. The germs naturally contained in the milk stayed back with the fat, but the power to kill bacteria remained in the clear filtrate. This was proved by adding germs to the filtrate, which destroyed them.

Juvenile Love at Last Has Legal Definition A Los Angeles couple eloped to Santa Ana with the intention of getting married, but failed of the desired object owing to the fact that both were minors. Later, the young man was sued by the irate father of the girl.

When the case came up, the attorney for the defense asked that the action be dismissed on the ground that when all was said and done, it was just a case of puppy love.

"What do you call puppy love?" asked the court.

"Well," replied the attorney, "it's the kind that's too young to have to get a license for."—Los Angeles Times.

Head Alone Lives "In October of November every year," writes Prof. J. Arthur Thomson in "John o' London's Weekly," "when the moon enters on its third quarter, for half an hour before sunrise, the long pale worms back out of the crevices among the coral reefs and jerk off their whole body, except the head end, which keeps its hold in the coral cranny. Then the sea teems with wriggling greenish worms; it is like vermicelli soup for several inches deep. The worm-bodies wriggle and burst, liberating millions of eggs and sperm cells. All the bodies die; but the heads live on and grow new bodies for next year, thus avoiding the nemesis of total death. Subtlety at a low level!"
