Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

[From the Chicago Tribune.] "Don't trifle with a cold," is a good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary cold will become severe if neglected, and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by Mary A. Mee.

Files Initiative Petition.

J. F. Reddy, mayor of Medford, last week filed with the secretary of state at Salem an initiative petition for an amendment to the state constitution granting to cities and towns the exclusive control of the liquor, pool-selling and gambling business. The petition contained more than 9000 signatures.

Our Big Clubbing Offer.

Arrangements have just been completed whereby the Central Point Herald is enabled to make one of the greatest clubbing offers ever made by an Oregon newspaper. Here it is: Central Point Herald, per year, $1.50. Oregon Journal (semi-weekly), $1.50. Pacific Monthly - - - - $1.00.

Total - - - - $4.00. Our price for all three, only $2.50

The Semi-weekly Journal is the leading semi-weekly newspaper of the state. It gives all the general and state news and in addition gives the complete and correct market reports twice each week. In the Friday issue a page of "Funny Pictures" for the children, a page of short stories, and other features make it a welcome visitor in every home.

The Pacific Monthly, published at Portland, is the leading magazine of the West. It is ably edited and beautifully illustrated. Its stories are clean, wholesome and interesting, all with more or less of a flavor of the West. Special articles on irrigation, stock-raising and similar industries are at once entertaining and instructive.

The Central Point Herald is a strictly local newspaper. The HERALD does its best to set forth the advantages of the Rogue River Valley, particularly that portion immediately adjacent and tributary to its town. It labors for the advancement and upbuilding of Central Point and vicinity and is entitled to the support of every citizen of this section of the Valley.

Take advantage of this great offer at once. It will only stand for a limited time. Three Publications that you need for the price of two. You save $1.50 and that's "worth while."

"I never know what to do with my feet when I am in a parlor," remarked the bashful young man as the conversation lagged.

"Did it ever occur to you," remarked the very matter of fact maid, "that you might steer them toward home?"—Chicago News.

Burglar (rousing the sleeping head of the family)—Don't move or I'll shoot! What's your money hid?

Head of the family (struck by a bright thought)—It's in the pocket of my wife's dress.

Burglar—That's all right. I'll just take the dress. Thanks.—Exchange.

Carson—Has your wife got your smoking room fitted up yet?

Meske—Yes. You ought to see it. It's the coolest place in the house.

"I suppose you find great comfort in it, don't you?"

"Oh, she won't let me go in it. It's merely to look at."

Kind Lady—You are a strong and healthy looking man. Why don't you go to work?

Tramp—Well, it's like this, ma'am. I ain't got nobody to look out fer me but meself, an' ef I got work I might be deprivin' a man with a wife an' a lot of kids of a job.

The first sea fight within the present limits of the United States proper was fought in the summer of 1639 off Block Island between Captain John Gallop, with a crew of one man and two boys, and a force of Block Island and Pequot Indians, the victory remaining with Captain Gallop.

Smith—Did you tell your wife you wouldn't be home till late?

Ribinson (carelessly)—Certainly.

"You did?"

"Yes, I should think so."

"And what did she say?"

"Well, as soon as I had told her I rang off the telephone."

"Why didn't you vote for my friend?" asked the politician. "He's the most popular man in the state."

"That's the reason," answered Farmer Cornssett. "I never yet see a man that can't do a business of his own. He had much of a likin' for real hard work."—Washington Star.

He peered at the looth where the prettiest girls were in charge. They greeted him with winning smiles.

"Can you change a ten?" he anxiously inquired. "We have no change," they chorused. "And I have no ten," he reluctantly murmured. Then he moved away.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"If you refuse me," said the infatuated young man, "I shall blow out my brains."

"I'd hate to have you do that," replied the girl thoughtfully, "and yet it would be a good joke on pa. He says you haven't any, you know."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Disgusted Wife—Say, niggah, eber seent Ah married yo' yo's dun nuffin' 'cept Ah round do house. Doan' yo' eber feel enny ambition?

Lazy Husband—Ah feels ambition w'en Ah's cittin' round hyah, honey, but Jos' 's soon 's Ah stahts ter wok Ah gits discouraged.—Judge.

Lions, tigers and other beasts of prey at zoological gardens and menageries follow the example of mankind in eating by day and sleeping at night.

Miss Gettinton (archly)—I hear you are thinking seriously of matrimony, Mr. McCoy.

Mr. McCoy—Me? Say, what do you take me for?

Miss Gettinton—Oh, Jack, for better or for worse, of course! But this is so sudden!—Cleveland Leader.

Miss Garlinghorn—I know I'll look like a fright with my hair done up this way. Photographer—But think how much worse Miss Maryland would look with her hair in that style. That will do. Thanks. I think we have managed to catch your very best expression, madam.—Exchange.

"I understand he's the author of several successful novels."

"Oh, no! He's the successful author of several novels, but—"

"What's the difference?"

"He's merely succeeded in writing the novels; that's all."—Philadelphia Press.

Trafalgar.

Trafalgar was not merely a great naval victory—it was the most decisive and the most durable in its results of all the battles of the world. It not only gave England naval supremacy, but no sea dog has barked at sea against Great Britain for all the years that have supervened or is likely to do so for some years to come. No other battle has ever had such a result.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Sicilian Child's Amulets.

In Sicily old time superstitions are still general. The constant dread of the peanster is the evil eye, and all wear charms to ward it off. When a child is born four amulets are hung about its neck—a little horn of coral, a cockleshell, a key and a tiny sack of salt—the horn to keep away the evil eye, the shell for safe keeping, the key to enter paradise and the salt for wisdom.—Peixotto's "By Italian Seas."

Behind the King.

The king can do no wrong, but there is no innocent thing that no sovereign ever does—namely, to stand with his back against a wall. At the royal stand at Newmarket or elsewhere his majesty invariably leaves ample room for persons to pass behind him, so that he may escape having perpetually to reply to their salutations, which he would be bound to notice did these people pass in front of him.—London Chronicle.

HARVESTING ROOTS.

Deductions From Experiments in Handling Such Crops.

The proper methods of harvesting and storing roots are obviously of the utmost importance in the use of such crops for winter feeding. The deductions from the New York Cornell station experiments which have to do with this subject follow:

Roots are generally harvested by hand except in the case of the sugar beets, when a plow may be used to raise them from the ground. When turnips, rutabagas and mangels are grown for succession feeding the turnips are generally harvested first, before frost. Injure rutabagas or mangels, although the first frost should be a sign of harvesting time unless it be exceptionally early and very sure to be followed by later warm weather. In late summer and early fall the tops do not grow much, yet the roots are developing and ripening rapidly.

In the case of mangels, rutabagas and most turnips the plants can be pulled by hand, the tops twisted off as they are pulled and the roots piled or thrown directly into the wagon. It is thought that piling and afterward loading are less fatiguing than throwing the roots directly into the wagon as pulled. The roots should reach their places of storage with as little dirt and bruising as possible.

Cellar Storage.

Roots may be stored in a cellar or in a pit in the field. The cellar is the better whenever practicable. It may be a part of the barn structure or built under the driveway of a bank barn, or it may be built as a dugout in a side hill near the barn. Perhaps concrete is the best material for construction. It should be not over seven or eight feet deep and large enough to hold the yield or supply. It is best to have it located and constructed in such a way that the roots can be dropped in from above, preferably through trapdoors in the bottom of the wagon and the roof of the cellar. It is essential that the walls (if built in the ground) and the floor have good drainage and that ventilation be provided through the top and that the construction be frostproof. The ventilators should be left open until sweating has ceased, when they may be closed for the winter. In winter the cellar should be kept closed as much as possible on warm days. Roots should be so placed that turnips may be fed first, rutabagas next and after these mangels and carrots.

A Jersey Trucking Center.

An important trucking district is that around Freehold, N. J. The land is light clay and not remarkably heavy, although holding enough clay to retain moisture fairly well in a dry season like the present. It is an important potato section, the land being adapted to the crop and mostly fairly level and easy to cultivate.

Potatoes are raised in good sized fields, the work being done mostly by machinery and horse or mule power. The conditions are somewhat like those in the potato region in northern Maine. The season is long, but more subject to severe drought and to attacks of disease and insects. Labor is fairly abundant and not of the best quality. Machinery is used to the fullest extent. A four horse potato digger is in use on almost all large fields, an implement which throws the crop out in very short order. Potatoes are picked up by children, who are paid 5 cents per barrel. The yield on commercial fields ranges from 100 barrels downward.

Other vegetables are raised extensively, including cucumber pickles, cantaloupes, asparagus, peppers and tomatoes. Fruit is a very important crop, some of the largest pear orchards in the country being found in this section. They are mostly of the Kieffer and similar varieties. Early apples and peaches are grown in moderate quantities. Concord grapes promise a good crop.

The section is situated within a comparatively few miles of New York, Philadelphia and other large cities, and the products quickly reach market at prices which this season afford a fair margin of profit to the growers.—American Cultivator.

Milk Cans.

Market milk is the leading feature of New England dairying. Milk cans for Boston every morning leave northern New Hampshire, central Vermont, western Massachusetts and central Connecticut. Between thirty-five and forty carloads of milk arrive at Boston daily, almost all being of New England origin. The supply of milk for the smaller cities is also a business of large dimensions. The increasing use of cream makes that product of second importance. Maine sends a carload of cream to Boston daily, while large quantities are received from other sections along with the regular milk supply. Much of this market cream is separated by the farmers, gathered by creameries, where it is run through a separator for standardizing and then shipped to the city in bulk.—G. M. Whitaker.

Eating Moldy Corn.

Owing to the losses of live stock from eating moldy corn the scientists of the Iowa Agricultural college are making a study of molds in an endeavor to ascertain the poisonous mold, says Country Gentleman. A farmer near Dallas Center and another in Union county lost about $6,000 worth of stock recently through eating moldy corn. Professor Fammel of the college took up the investigation and so far has isolated four kinds of corn mold. If the poisonous germ can be isolated it is thought it will be the means of saving the live stock owners of the state large amounts of money annually.
