Frank Hawk's Auto

Frank Hawk has been putting in his spare time during the Winter getting his auto in shape for the coming season and it now has the appearance of having just come from the factory. Hay & Wagner, the artists, have put the finishing touches on the running gear and body of the auto and it is now ready for service. If Mr. Hawk would only take some good-looking man out for a spin around the block the first time he takes his "new" auto out of the shop it would make the machine look even better than it does now. He knows where the HERALD office is.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]
 "Don't trifle with a cold," is a good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected, and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold." Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by Mary A. Mee.

Freedom in Art.

It is common knowledge with every one who reads books that during the last generation the popular novel has steadily claimed a greater freedom. Subjects are now dealt with at which the mid-Victorians would have hid their faces. There are a realistic treatment and a frankness of language concerning matters of sex which the first three-quarters of the nineteenth century would not tolerate. Let it be remembered that we have not advanced. We have gone back.

It is not new art, but old, which has no reticence, says the London Telegraph. A realistic picture of physical passion, a frank naturalism in style, belongs as much to the centuries of Defoe and Smollett as to our own. This is not to say it is bad. Thackeray deliberately regretted the eighteenth century freedom. Since the time of Fielding, he complained, no writer had been permitted to the fullness of his power to portray a man. We have now come again to a time where there are no limitations.

Those who maintain a careful survey of the constant stream of ephemeral novels are well aware of the growth of a class which, not to mince words, must be called the objectionable. Each season now sees a number of books for which the most kindly critic in the world can find no reason for their existence unless it be to exploit immorality. Absurd in plot, wooden in character and ignorant in style, their vulgar descriptions alone provide them a certain popularity. And yet it is not because of a lack of appreciation of wholesome fiction that authors turn to the bypaths of life for motives and material. Books that elevate are among the "best sellers." The deeper problems of the soul confront the human mind in new form in every generation. In order to depict the struggle the novelist must have freedom from the canons of art, but mere license defeats its own end in the long run. A really bad book falls flat. The half bad book, however successful as a money maker, yields no reward to its author comparable to that following a book which every admiring reader may openly and heartily commend to others.

Sunday Law and Order.

Clashings of opinion with respect to the suitable observance of Sunday must be taken for granted in this country, where different views of the significance of the day of rest are prevalent. Some would have it observed as a day of rest and worship exclusively, and others wish to devote it to cheerful recreation. Some of those who seek recreation delight in Sunday shows and ball games, following the example of Europe, where the morning is usually given to attendance in church and the afternoon to music, with drinking and the sports that belong to a holiday.

There are but few citizens of America who do not concede that the day should be observed in an orderly manner. In fact, the average man believes in public order every day in the week. A programme for Sunday upon which all lovers of order can unite, the religious together with the indifferent, might result in fixing an example which the whole community could join in enforcing by the power of public opinion, using restraint sparingly. Opposing interests can generally yield a little without losing all.

The Army Career.

The recent argument of the secretary of war that service in the army should be made so attractive and desirable that first class recruits will be attracted is not new, but it comes from an authority which may be heeded. He insists that conditions should be established that will elevate and sustain the self respect of the enlisted man.

There seems to be no reason why the army may not be made as attractive for the enlisted man as for the commissioned officer. It is generally believed that any officer in the service can find better paying positions out of the army than he can hope for in it. As a rule an officer who leaves the service for civil life gets on well. His military training and experience are highly practical, his habits good and his character formed. It is not necessary for an officer to go backward. But for the average American young man service in the ranks is a backward step, and reform must take place before good all around soldier blood will take to the army in time of peace.

Perhaps the scarcity of army recruits and the shortage of young women teachers at the same time would have no significance in any year but leap year.

Under the new New York license law marriage is made more difficult, but the beginning of repentance is not delayed at all thereby.

THE CORN WORM.

Fall Plowing is the Best Remedy Known at Present.

The caterpillar locally known as the corn worm or ear worm is also known as the cotton boll worm in the south, where it bores into the cotton bolls; the tomato worm in some states, from its habit of boring into tomatoes during the early part of the season, and the tobacco bud worm in the tobacco growing states. This insect probably prefers green corn to any other of its many kinds of food plants.

In the latter part of September and through October the caterpillars that mature in corn go underground to a depth of from two to five inches and change to pupae, passing the winter in this condition. Early in the spring, if the ground remains undisturbed, the moths, which are of a dull clay yellow with indistinct markings on the forewings and expanding from one and a half to two inches, make their appearance and lay their eggs upon such plants as they can find. They lay from 200 to 500 eggs. The eggs are shaped like an inverted teacup, with the vertical ribs converging toward the apex. The caterpillars reach their growth in from two to four weeks. The moths appear in from two to three weeks later. The caterpillars are rather slender and nearly hairless and are from an inch and a half to two inches long. They vary in color from light green to brown and are marked with alternating light and dark brown stripes and lines running lengthwise of the body.

Combating the Insect.

Unfortunately the combating of this insect with any success in the cornfield is still an unsolved problem. It has been found by experiments that plowing in the fall and breaking up the underground sheltered pupae and exposing them to the vicissitudes of the weather will in almost every instance result in their death. However, it is not often practical to plow corn ground in the fall. The effect of such a measure would be to diminish the number of moths the following season.—George A. Dean in Kansas Farmer.

Feeding Silage.

There are many precautions which must be taken in feeding corn silage, not only because of its effect upon the cow, but because of its effect upon the milk. As a rule, silos are not very plentifully distributed over the country. In fact, they are not nearly so common as they should be, but even at the present time we find milk condensaries and creameries that are refusing the milk products of silage fed cows. This is not because the silage which the cow eats taints the milk, but it is the silage which the cow does not eat that taints the milk. Only last winter in conversation with a prominent milk condenser the writer was given these facts:

This gentleman made the statement that the milk produced on his own farm was produced largely by the use of corn silage, but great care was exercised in the feeding. The reason his company prohibited the use of corn silage in the production of milk by the farmers and dairymen was because of the carelessness with which the silage was fed. The odors were permitted to remain in the barn, and this odor was what tainted the milk.

If the silo connects with the barn by a corridor, the feeding may be as convenient as where the silo is connected directly with the barn. By keeping the doors of the corridor closed the odor from the silo is confined, and if the feeding is deferred until after milking hours there is no reason why there should be any odor of silage whatever in the barn. Oftentimes, however, we find that the cows are overfed of silage, and a portion of it remains in their feed boxes or around their front feet. Naturally this portion of the feed decays and molds, and a very disagreeable odor remains to contaminate the milk.—H. G. Van Pelt in Jersey Bulletin.

Fall Plowing Destroys Insects.

Many insects may be prevented by fall plowing. Land in grass for a number of years often becomes badly infested with cutworms, wireworms and other insects that may prove very destructive to corn and other cultivated crops. If the land is plowed in the fall, the freezing and thawing of winter will destroy a large number of these pests. If, on the other hand, the land were left unplowed until late spring, they would have an ideal place in which to pass the winter and come out in the spring ready to destroy everything in sight. In the case of spring plowing of sod land the food of these insects is suddenly destroyed by the plow, and the few plants of corn or tobacco then put in the ground are not sufficient to feed this horde of insects, and it becomes next to impossible to get a crop started.—Professor J. H. Phillips, Virginia Experiment Station.

Ants in the Cotton Field.

The following are some recent records of the work of the ant shown by examination of squares picked at random from the ground in cotton fields in various parts of Texas: At Beville, Tex., Aug. 13, out of 874 weevil stages found 984 had been destroyed by ants. In another field, also at Beville, on Sept. 3, the ants had destroyed 11 out of 117 stages. At Dallas, on Oct. 15, the ants had destroyed 39 out of 247 weevil stages.—W. D. Hunter.

The Test With Grapes.

Grapes should never be picked from the vine till fully ripe and sweet, for they will not develop sugar and ripen after they are picked. I have known unprincipled growers to spoil the market for white grapes by shipping Niagara before they had become ripe and sweet. Tasting is the sure test with grapes.—W. N. Hutt.
