Prof. H. A. Howell, of Havana, Cuba, Recommends Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"As long ago as I can remember my mother was a faithful user and friend of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, but never in my life have I realized its true value until now," writes Prof. H. A. Howell, of Howell's American School, Havana, Cuba. "On the night of February 3rd our baby was taken sick with a very severe cold; the next day was worse and the following night his condition was desperate. He could not lie down and it was necessary to have him in the arms every moment. Even then his breathing was difficult. I did not think he would live until morning. At last I thought of my mother's remedy, Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which we gave, and it afforded prompt relief, and now three days later, he has fully recovered. Under the circumstances I would not hesitate a moment in saying that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and that only, saved the life of our dear little boy." For sale by Mary A. Mee.

Very Practical Details in Profitable Dairying.

By JOHN MICHELS, Clemson College, S. C.

Under average conditions a cow yielding twenty-two pounds of milk should have a ration composed of about two-thirds roughage and one-third concentrates. By a number of trial calculations we find that the required nutrients are approximately obtained by selecting six pounds of wheat bran, four pounds of cottonseed meal, eight pounds of corn stover and forty pounds of corn silage. For greater yields it is best, as a rule, to increase only the concentrates to meet the requirements of the additional flow of milk, thus making the proportion of concentrate to roughage greater the larger the yield of milk.

The main part of the ration should be supplied in two feeds, one in the morning and the other in the late afternoon. It is desirable to feed some dry roughage at noon, especially when the roughage in the morning and evening consists of silage. The cow, on account of her large storehouse, the paunch, is capable of storing up a large quantity of feed and therefore does not require as many feeds as some other farm animals.

Concentrates and Roughages.

As a rule, it is best to feed the concentrates just previous to milking and the roughage immediately thereafter. The grain helps to attract the cows to their stalls, and by feeding the roughage after milking we avoid tainting the milk with undesirable odors when the roughage contains these. When corn silage, for example, is fed immediately before or during milking its odor is always perceptible in the milk. When fed after milking the odor is never detected. It is believed also that feeding the concentrates by themselves will result in a more thorough mixing of the saliva with them and thus increase their digestibility. Furthermore, a great deal of dust can be avoided by feeding the roughage after milking, particularly when the roughage consists of hay or dry fodder.

A prevailing opinion that heavy concentrates will form an injurious, pasty mass in the cow's stomach does not seem to be well founded. When the concentrates are fed directly before milking and the roughage directly after there will be sufficient mixing in the paunch before the contents pass into the stomach proper. The writer for several years has successfully followed the practice of feeding concentrates and roughage separately when the former consisted of as much as five pounds of cottonseed meal per day.

An average cow in full flow of milk will consume forty pounds of corn silage to good advantage. This amount of silage, combined with eight or ten pounds of dry fodder or hay, makes a good combination of roughage for a dairy cow.

Successful Feeding.

In the economical production of milk it is absolutely essential to feed cows according to their capacity. Just what this productive capacity is can be determined only by keeping a careful account of the feed consumed and the milk and butter fat yielded by each cow individually.

About half the nutrients called for in a ration for an average milker are used to sustain the body, so that it will neither gain nor lose weight, the other half being used to form milk. Returns for feed can therefore be expected only from about 50 per cent of the total nutrients required.

This means that a cow on a full ration will yield practically twice as much milk as she would on three-fourths of a ration. Yet there are thousands of dairymen who fail to supply the last quarter of a ration and thus bring ruin upon themselves and their business.

Battle of the Bulls.

When the senior calves (grades) were sifted of their trash, some real beauties stood before the Judge. Here was uncovered the champion of the grades and eventually the grand champion of the show. This was the handsome grade Shorthorn calf Roan King.

GRADE CALF ROAN KING.

[Champion of the grades and grand champion of the show at the late international.]

shown by James Leask of Ontario. He is a son of Gloster's Choice, and his dam was by Royal Banner, a bull which came to this side. He is a grand calf, with remarkable arch of rib, a finely finished front, light lower lines and little waste as a killer, and he is smoothly covered on back and ribs. The chief criticism lies in his tendency toward softness of flesh.

As a type of a Shorthorn show steer, with a weight of 1,000 pounds at about thirteen months old, Roan King fills a high ideal. He is quite mature, although in the calf class.—Breeder's Gazette.

Dairy Byproducts.

The effect of dairy byproducts on the carcass is one of the most important results of feeding them to hogs. It is generally admitted that, while excellent hams and bacon may be produced without dairy byproducts, the use of these byproducts will result in pork of a more nearly uniform high quality.

Socialism and Orthodox Creeds.

The notion which is held by some orthodox teachers that religion and socialism are tending toward a union of effort which may be permanent and work marvels in society is vigorously combated by the Rev. Dr. P. T. Forsyth, an ultra orthodox English divine. Dr. Forsyth declares that desire to add in social reform is part of his religion. Writing in the British Congregationalist, he says that the ideals of most "Socialists of the day and of working-men who are not Socialists are concerned especially with the exaltation of their own class" and continues:

These ideals practically become their religion. They will listen readily to anything the minister of Christ has to say which serves or promotes them. They will willingly utilize the church in this way. They will listen to the tale of a Christ who sympathizes with these aspirations and contributes to them. But when the church or its minister claims a hearing for a message which every man and every society must absolutely obey and serve; when we preach a Christ who not only serves man, but by right of that service claims the total surrender and service of every man and race; when we pass, as we must, from the gift of Christ to the demand of Christ, the responsibility to Christ, the total humiliated, unconditional, worshipful, triumphant surrender of self to Christ, then the social idealists have no use for us. They talk angry claps about the church's loss of dominion, the aloofness of the preachers, their hanging back, their cowardice, self seeking, plotism and all the rest of it.

The doctor argues that the lack of harmony between socialistic and religious ideals is fundamental, because "Christianity does not make man's happiness its first concern. His own sympathy with the principles of socialism arises from his belief in Christ and not simply in human nature." To quote further:

Society, we all feel, must be slowly reorganized so as to provide scope for moral manhood. But we need something more than that. Society cannot create moral manhood, cannot provide the dynamic which demands the scope. And it is in my religion that Christ can and that Christ alone can. And I would like to close on this note. I would like to say that the true church of Christ is worth more than any scheme of social order. And there is in the gospel of Christ that which will produce such a change in society as will leave the Socialist programme far behind and far below and long ago, even in history, things that it has not entered the heart of man to conceive.

The difficulty seems to be, as Dr. Forsyth suggests, that the Socialist's idea of Christ as brother merely is essentially incomplete as a "dynamic." To the believer Christ is first to be accepted as Redeemer and served as King.

The President's Persistence.

Failure to pass the scrutiny of the supreme court has made the employers' liability bill something of an issue for the administration to cope with. The president has already spoken for the principle which lies behind the bill and is committed to it. Comments by the press of the country upon the adverse decision of the court show a general sympathy with the main features of this particular piece of national legislation.

One feature of the act which the court declared unconstitutional was radical in that it abolished the common law rule that one who has been guilty of contributory negligence cannot recover. The amount of negligence attributable to the injured employee might be considered in fixing the amount of damages. A bill applicable to government employees only, drafted to meet the president's views as to what the whole body of employees of the country require for their protection, may become a model for state laws that will stand the constitutional tests in every case. State laws might go even farther than congress went in the bill recently turned down and not fall under the ban of public opinion.

Congress is going to deal with the navy reorganization problem. Considering the quantity of bickering which the present unsystematic method of dealing with that branch of the service engenders, no one will deny the need of legislation of some kind. But if any think that it will be enacted without storms they are mistaken.

One French writer charges Boni de Castellane with occasionally becoming profane. Possibly the count thinks he can rehabilitate himself by trying to make a noise like a man.

Somehow all the astrologers and clairvoyants appear to be backward about coming forward with their predictions of what will happen on the 3d of next November.

George Bernard Shaw criticises some of his earlier writings so severely that it will be interesting to see what he has to say of himself ten or fifteen years hence.

The Japanese are now said to be afflicted with the popular song craze. Another good sign that they will soon be in a fighting mood once more.

There are 27,000 men in Greater New York who will insist that the country is all right just as long as their wives continue to support them.

There will be no quarrel with Japan over the immigration question, although there may be some very keen diplomacy.
