"One Touch of Nature Makes the Whole World Kin."

When a rooster finds a big flat worm he calls all the hens in the farm yard to come and share it. A similar trait of human nature is to be observed when a man discovers something exceptionally good—he wants all his friends and neighbors to share the benefits of his discovery. This is the touch of nature that makes the whole world kin. This explains why people who have been cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy write letters to the manufacturers for publication, that others similarly ailing may also use it and obtain relief. Behind every one of these letters is a warm hearted wish of the writer to be of use to someone else. This remedy is for sale by Mary A. Nee.

The Ownership of Ptolemy Caesar.

more back yard orgies for you unless some one has an eye on you."

He started homeward, the dog following meekly at his heels, but before he reached the other side of the park he caught the quick tread of light foot-falls. An agitated voice close behind him was saying, "Oh, I beg your pardon."

He swung about to find himself face to face with Katherine Gray. Ravenor unconsciously stiffened. It was a trifle disconcerting to come thus abruptly upon a girl with whom he had quarreled but a short week before—a girl who before that quarrel had been the subject of his everyday dream.

The girl was equally surprised and embarrassed. She caught her breath in a little gasp, and the quick color mounted her cheeks. Almost instantly, however, she had recovered her poise.

"I'm sorry to trouble you," she said coldly. "I merely came for my dog. I saw he was following you."

"Your dog?" said Ravenor. "My dog," she repeated.

Ravenor looked uncomfortable, but he faced her resolutely.

"There must be a mistake about this," said he. "I'm very sure he's mine."

"Yours?" "Let me prove it to you. He knows his name. Here, Ptolemy."

The dog came obediently to Ravenor's side. He sat down and looked up expectantly.

The girl gasped. "I don't understand it," she said. "Now let me try the same proof. Here, Caesar."

The dog trotted over to her and repeated his maneuvers.

"Good heavens!" said Ravenor, utterly bewildered for the moment. Then suddenly he had an inspiration.

"Did you buy him recently?" he asked.

"This afternoon," she confessed. "Of a seedy, shifty eyed man?" She nodded.

Ravenor drew a long breath; then he laughed. "That explains it," he declared. "I bought him of the same man at 7 this morning."

"Oh!" said the girl; then she, too, fell to laughing.

"Come," said Ravenor at length, "let me walk home with you, and there we'll decide who has the better claim to Caesar or Ptolemy, or whatever his name is."

It was a long talk they had before a roaring fire in the cozy hall. It settled many points besides the ownership of the dog. When it was finished it was twilight, and two very contented young people were enjoying their rightful heritage of happiness again.

"And about the dog?" Ravenor suggested when he finally arose to leave. "You take him," she said. "He's really yours by right of priority. You bought him first."

"I'll tell you," Ravenor said, with conviction. "Let's call him Ptolemy Caesar and own him jointly, and—let's—er—well, fix it so we can have him with us both, you know. Will you, Katherine?"

The girl fell to laughing until the tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Oh, what a way of putting it!" she cried, but there was a light in her eyes that brought Ravenor to her side.

And the newly christened Ptolemy Caesar leaped about them with yelps of joy.

A leading lawyer of New York who has investigated the subject says it is appalling to learn the number of college graduates of long standing who are today filling clerical positions at $10 or $12 a week. For many years, he says, it has been possible in New York city to employ at $10 to $12 a week large numbers of lawyers of over ten years' standing who were graduates of both college and law school. Doubtless these statements will lead to inferences prejudicial to college education, but it will be very difficult to convince sensible persons that a young man with such an equipment is not in better case to win in the battle of life than without it.

One of the bills before congress is said to be so extremely simple that "almost any one can understand it." In that case it is safe to bet that it will be amended before the lawyers in congress permit it to be passed.

By sending two lions to the pope with the assurance that he desires to protect missionaries the king of Abyssinia can at least prove that he has given the missionaries two more chances than they had before.
