

Boy's Life Saved.

My little boy, four years old, had a severe attack of dysentery. We had two physicians; both of them gave him up. We then gave him Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which cured him and believe that saved his life—WILLIAM H. STROLING, Carbon Hill, Ala. There is no doubt but this remedy saves the lives of many children each year. Give it with castor oil according to the plain printed directions and a cure is certain. For sale by Mary A. Mee.

Observation Cars.

On and after November 15, 1907, the observation cars between Portland and Oakland California, on trains Nos. 15 and 16 will be carried through instead of being cut out, as heretofore, at Roseburg.

Southbound, under this new arrangement, passengers holding proper transportation and Pullman accommodations may occupy these cars on the night leaving Portland until reaching Eugene at 12:32 a. m.

Help for Those Who Have Stomach Trouble.

After doctoring for about twelve years for a bad stomach trouble, and spending nearly five hundred dollars for medicine and doctors' fees, I purchased my wife one box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, which did her so much good that she continued to use them and they have done her more good than all the medicine I bought before.—SAMUEL BOYER, Folsom, Iowa. This medicine is for sale by Mary A. Mee. Samples free.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Would Have Saved Him $100.00.

"In 1902 I had a very severe attack of diarrhoea," says R. N. Farrar, of Cat Island, La. "For several weeks I was unable to do anything. On March 18, 1907, I had a similar attack, and took Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which gave me prompt relief. I consider it one of the best medicines of its kind in the world, and had I used it in 1902 believe it would have saved me a hundred dollar doctor's bill." Sold by Mary A. Mee.

A Brief Elopement

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

None of the boy pupils in attendance at the Union school in Medina that particular winter that Professor Wellman was principal had the slightest idea that he had any romance in his soul. He hunted for boys to lick; he gave out double lessons; he scared little girls half to death with his scowls. And yet the professor was bubbling over with soft heartedness and only waited an opportunity to develop it. The opportunity came two months after he did, and he was embracing it at the same time that we were calling him a stony hearted wretch and predicting that he would never find a woman to marry him. The professor, being a bachelor, went to board in the family of Deacon Hardman. The deacon had been a widower for five years and had at last at the age of forty-five married a girl of twenty-three. He was accounted a fatherly man and a good man, and it soon became common gossip that his young wife was making things bad for him. In the schoolmaster she had some one to tell her troubles to. What he didn't see as an inmate of the house she would tell him. When she became confidential he became her champion. She told him of the deacon slapping her mouth, and he shuddered. She told him of being choked, and he bubbled. She told him of being dragged around by the hair of the head and sat on, and he wanted to take the husband's life.

According to the young wife, the deacon was sly. He would call her his birdie at the table and half an hour later chastise her and squeeze her throat in the bedroom. He would sing hymns with her in the sitting room and threaten to murder her down cellar. The professor saw nothing, but heard all. His pity, indignation, sympathy and several other sentiments were aroused.

One day the deacon had to go over to Berryville on business that would detain him two days. He went by train, leaving the old horse and buggy at home. That night his wife and the schoolmaster eloped. Their trunks were packed and tied on to the buggy, and they set out to drive a distance of twenty-five miles to the train.

They had scarcely got clear of the town when the old horse, which had no sentiment in his soul and was not a bit interested in elopements, fell down and broke the shaft. Up to this moment the wife had been as soft as butter and as tender as chicken, but now she suddenly changed and called the professor names. She called him a doughhead and a fool and a lot of other things that astonished him, but by and by he repaired the broken shaft and a new start was made.

A mile farther on it began to rain. It was a cold rain. It was a rain that meant business. It soaked them to the skin in ten minutes. Then the deacon's birdie swore. She swore cheerfully and freely. The astonished professor chided her, and she slapped his mouth. He expressed his belief that she wasn't the martyr he took her for, and she slapped it again.

By and by the rain held up. It will do that sometimes, no matter whether you are eloping or out on the road buying hogs. Then a new start was made. The professor was between two minds. He didn't know whether to keep on and save the woman from further chokings or go back and lick the boys harder than ever, and as a consequence he drove into a mudhole, the whole outfit sticking fast. Thinking he had arrived at the end of his journey, the old horse lay down and allowed the buggy to settle to the hubs. The woman swore some more. She also clawed the professor's face.

It took an hour to make the horse understand that the journey had just begun and to extricate the vehicle, and then a new start was made for an island in the Pacific. Sentiment had chilled, but not killed. They had made another half mile and were talking about the way the husband had menaced her with the crowbar when both front wheels of the weary buggy went down in unison, the old horse staggered and lurched around, and finally the outfit rolled down the bank into a creek. The woman was the first out. She welcomed the professor with language and kicks. She made a new attack on him with fists and fingers. In fact, he had to haul off and hit her in the nose in self defense. The professor crawled up the bank and started back for the village. If any observations followed him he gave them no heed. He knew that he was followed for some distance by a woman with a club, but in the darkness he had all the advantage.

On Saturday and Sunday we saw the professor about. He looked like a man that had loved and lost. The deacon got home Sunday night to find that his wife had gone, and certain folks said that they hadn't seen him look so relieved since his marriage. He was even jocular and jolly in his talk. On Monday morning we were in school at the usual hour. So was the professor. That something was about to happen we could all see. Something did. He began with the biggest boy in school and went down to the smallest girl and administered to each one a thorough tanning.

Then he remarked that school was dismissed pending the arrival of a new teacher, and he headed the procession as we all walked out. We were glad at the time, but conscience stricken later on. We had sized him up as possessing a heart of stone, whereas he was simply bubbling over with tenderness for his fellow men. The deacon's wife never returned. She continued on and eloped by herself. The Army Reserve.

The idea of making the state troops a permanent reserve for the regular army has taken definite shape. If the plan outlined by the assistant secretary of war is carried through, all the available military strength of the country will be under a single system and the confusion of the past done away with. Opinions will differ as to the advisability of having state troops independent of national control. The fact is that, while a few states have in recent years maintained fairly efficient establishments, the general status of the militia has not been on a par with the general military development of the country.

It is difficult to keep up the proper spirit in militia. One soldier enlists and undergoes training in the belief that he is to have a chance to defend the nation in time of war. But when war comes he finds a majority of the regiment disposed to take advantage of the militia laws and refuse to take up arms except in defense of the state. Again, the opportunity to keep up to date in the matter of drill, camp training and equipment has not been equal for all the states nor for all the regiments in a given state. An earnest young man does not care to bear the name of being a soldier unless he can show himself the equal of the best or nearly equal and improving. This type of militiamen is the one to foster, for when the need of a re-enforcement to the regular army is upon us it would be a calamity to find that the ready reserve was made up of material lacking soldierly qualities. The fact that the militia was instructed by regular army officers stimulated the spirit of the men, for occasionally it brought them in touch with thorough soldiers. The opportunity to train in camps with regulars and to be measured by the standards set for regulars will bring to the ranks of the state volunteers the best raw material in the land, and there will be less likelihood of disappointment when the reserve is called out for action.

The Too Handy Pistol.

Police chiefs must know what they are talking about when they declare that we need a law restricting the sale and use of deadly weapons. The police have to handle the shooting cases and often have to search for the guilty ones with few clues to guide them. Now it has been shown in cities where the dealers in pistols are licensed and compelled to keep records of sales that persons guilty of mysterious shooting are often brought to book through data furnished by the shopkeepers.

Naturally a person who has to submit to cross examination when buying a pistol may think twice before taking the chances of using it wrongfully and being caught. Few are desperate enough to buy a gun with intent to kill under circumstances which can easily be brought out and will prove the intent. Recently a number of women have used pistols with deadly effect upon men whom they accused of wronging them. Perhaps they did not care to conceal their purpose beyond effecting a surprise of the victims. Yet a slight check will sometimes lead to a sober second thought. But pistol owning and pistol carrying are far too common. There are too many pistols within reach of the angry and the irresponsible. That is the long and short of it. The citizen who has legitimate use for a pistol can easily prove it, and the citizen or alien who has no legitimate use for one should be brought up with a round turn by a very rigorous law if found having one in possession.

Judge Taft has laughingly declared that "no real gentleman weighs over 300 pounds," but he is willing to admit that he rarely comes within the inhibition, as he keeps close to the 300 pound mark. Like most fat men, he has learned that slow starvation is about the only remedy for too much flesh.

Among Table Ornaments

a well-filled decanter has first choice among "choice spirits." That "little drop of something" that sounds so vague and mysterious, has really a definite meaning when it is bought of us. It then means "something good." Everybody likes to blow their own horn, but our customers are the ones that give us the most praise. They swear by the high quality Wines and Liqueurs that we handle. You'll do the same after trying them.
