MILKING COWS BY MACHINERY.

Difficulty in securing competent and steady help in milking cows has been a great hindrance to development of dairying in Oregon. For this season much interest will center in the practical demonstration of the operation of milking machines at the State Fair next month, when all manufacturers of such machines will be on hand to show what their inventions will do. If it can be shown that any or all of the machines are a success, the demonstration will go far toward giving new impetus to the dairying industry—an industry which, more than any other, tends to keep an agricultural region productive and make it prosperous.

There are plenty of men in the country who know how to milk, but they don't like to work and will not do it if they cannot get anything else that will pay nearly as good wages. In recent years, when employment has been plentiful, men have deserted the dairy farms to work in the logging camps, lumber mills or railroad construction gangs. Though that work is more lull-some than milking cows, it is more attractive to strong men and the hours suit them better. As a rule, too, the wages have been better than most dairymen have felt that they could afford to pay. Present indications are that employment will continue to be plentiful for reliable men, so that the outlook for the dairyman is no better than it has been so far as the problem of securing help is concerned.

attention to the subject of milking machines, and seems inclined to believe that several of the contrivances now in use are or can be made successful. Mrs. S. A. Yoakam, Deputy Dairy and Food Commissioner for Coos County, who has charge of the dairy exhibit at the State Fair, has milking machines in use on her ranch, and at the last meeting of the Dairyman's Association she assured the members that the machines are a success. The particular advantages they are believed to possess are regularity of service, thorough milking, cleanliness and simplicity of operation.—Portland Oregonian.

The Vacation Habit. In spite of the predictions which had reference to the money pressure the outgoing European steamers at the beginning of the hot season were crowded with Americans. If the records of travel are not broken this year, there will apparently be no marked decline in the number who are seeking some sort of an outing abroad. The state of business here may not be indicated one way or another, for the great mass of those who take the European trip have been saving for it for years and, having the money in hand, may as well go as to stay at home, so far as business conditions affect them. Fall times may give the opportunity to a few to go without loss; but, as a rule, the crowds come from the salaried class, and business fluctuations does not concern them. Unquestionably a change once a year is a good thing for every one. The attraction to Europe is great, but the trip is too expensive to become a habit with the industrious and thrifty. To very many it serves as an incentive to study the home country and to finding out new ways of having a good time at very little cost. The tourist abroad observes that the natives and also many of the foreign tourists are getting enjoyment out of the simplest things and that it isn't really worth while to go so far, at least not a second or a third time, for what can be enjoyed at home. We have at home sea-shore and mountain, incomparable lakes and stretches of forest. The "just as good" vacation outing here has the extra merit that it costs less in the long run, and the money expended stays at home and may get around to the same pocketbook again after awhile.

Under the New Currency Law. Two New York national banks, which stand at the head of the conservative banks of the country, recently returned to the federal government certain federal funds which they have held on deposit and at the same time gave notice that they will not in future receive for deposit any government funds upon which interest is demanded. It is an irrevocable rule of these two banks that they will not pay interest upon any deposits, and, as they do not pay interest upon the deposits of other people, firms and corporations, they will not make an exception in favor of the government. The recently enacted currency law provides that national banks receiving deposits of federal funds must pay 1 per cent interest on such deposits. This clause gives governmental approval and indorsement to a questionable principle. In the competition likely to arise in banking for an increase of business interest on deposits is sometimes paid by certain banks, with the result that as the interest so paid mounts higher and higher the banks involved increase the rates of interest on the money which they lend to cover these higher rates and in so doing take risks on insufficient security. The creditors of the banks in order to get even for the high rates they pay must also take speculative risks, and in every financial trouble like that of last October it is noticed that those banks which pay high interest on deposits are most seriously involved.

The Cheaper Postage to England. There seems to be no doubt that the reduction of letter postage between the United States and the United Kingdom from 5 cents an ounce to 2 cents an ounce will result in loss to the treasury of both countries for a time. The English estimate that there will be a falling off on that side of the water of about $800,000 the first year, and our postal department expects to feel a like decline in receipts from this quarter. Reduction of postage on correspondence generally tends to increase the number of letters, and ultimately the revenue reaches the same plane as before the cut in rates. The lower the rate the more trifling the postage seems, and people having friends at a distance are continually having occasion to "drop a line" to let "the folks know what is going on." Increasing the weight limit on letters is undoubtedly a boon to the public. Last October the limit for a five-cent stamp was raised from half an ounce to the full ounce. But the permitted weight of a letter for the minimum rate is of slight consequence compared with that of a marked reduction in the rate for the ordinary letter.
