FOR SALE—New 2 1/2 inch Bain wagon, cheap for cash. Inquire of J. E. Boswell. 381f

AT BED TIME

The little people are usually afraid of the dark, and a light bed room gives them confidence.

But a bed room lighted by open flame methods takes away from the secure feeling of the parents. Use electricity for light and there will be no danger of fire to the tiny ones. They can turn it off and on without danger. Send for the man NOW.

HER STRATEGY.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

"Walter," said my old chum, Bess, "why is it that I have never made any impression on you?"

"You have. I'm fond of you in spite of your many faults."

"Not the way the others are. By the bye, which is my chief fault?"

"Vanity."

"You don't mean that. I know you don't."

"You mustn't judge me as if I were a woman. Of course, if you said it you'd mean the opposite."

"I do so wish you had a better opinion of me."

"No, you don't. If you did you would strive to make me have a better opinion of you."

"How would you have me begin?"

"By turning the cold shoulder to every man who shows he wants you whom you don't want."

She shrugged her pretty shoulders, pouted, knit her brows and finally said: "Well, I will. Now tell me who all these men are. I wasn't aware of their existence."

"Burnett for one."

"I have never encouraged him the least little teeny weeny bit."

"And Shortwell."

"Nonsense! Mr. Shotwell has never been devoted to me."

"But, above all others, Atterbury."

"Mr. Atterbury and I have had a—"

"Tip."

"He has been very rude to me."

"I don't believe it; but, whether he has or hasn't, forgive him."

"Would you consider that turning the 'cold shoulder' to him?"

"It would be preliminary to treating him with indifference. Indifference would indicate that he had no chance. Men always accept the inevitable; he would fix his mind on another girl."

"The wretch!"

"You said you invited my good opinion. I have told you how to win it. There's no necessity to discuss the matter further. I'm reading about this new aeroplane. It will supplant all the others."

"Aeroplane be bothered! I wish this matter about Mr. Atterbury settled."

"I don't know how it can be settled except by you."

"I mean the matter about Mr. Atterbury that has come up between you and me. How I shall treat him? Don't you think he should apologize?"

"Certainly."

"Why, you don't know what the trouble is."

"Nor do I need to know it. Any man who has a difference with you is a fool not to apologize at once."

"Even if he is in the right?"

"Certainly. You don't suppose he should go on arguing with you till the crack of doom, do you?"

"Well, I never!"

"You don't care whether he is right or wrong. All you wish is to make him bend the knee to you."

"It's no wonder," she said presently, "that you have never felt toward me anything but the most commonplace friendship, having such a contemptible opinion of me."

"You're right. Men seldom fall in love with a girl they understand. They must be fuddled, like Atterbury."

"I did think once," she began in a plaintive voice, "that"—

"You didn't think any such thing. You never felt toward me in any way except as a pal—the only one you had who would give you his honest opinion of you."

She raised her big, black eyes and turned them upon me in one prolonged look of reproach. I wondered if I were not doing her an injustice. But I would not trust her. I resumed my paper, while she sat stabbing the sofa on which she sat with a big needle.

"Well," I said presently, having finished the article, "that beats anything in the shape of a flying machine I ever dreamed of."

My remark excited no response. Evidently she took no interest in flying machines. I turned over the sheets lazily.

"Hello," I exclaimed, "the abominable style of ladies' hats in vogue so long has changed!"

She raised her eyes with a look of inquiry in them. I laughed. She lowered them again. I arose.

"Shall you see Mr. Atterbury this evening?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Tell him, please, that I send a humble apology for my rude treatment of him."

"Phew! Is this preliminary to dropping him?"

"It is preliminary to winning a better opinion from you."

With that she walked out of the room.

Atterbury and I were bosom friends. I went straight to his house, found him at billiards, told him that my friend Bess was trifling with him and that after a lecture from me I thought she would behave herself. Then I gave her message, concluding with the words, "Now, take up with some other girl."

He left me somewhat abruptly. His brother came into the billiard room, and, finding me knocking the balls about, he proposed a game. We played several. An hour had passed when Atterbury returned with the most heavenly look of joy I ever saw on a man's face.

"Which beat?" he asked, trying to appear unconcerned.

"Rather let me ask which beat—you or Bess?"

"Don't know," he replied, with an idiotic grin. "I fancy we both came out about right. We're engaged."

Law Points.

For a bank to pay a check written on the blank of another bank without making inquiry is held in Vogel versus First State bank (Kan.), 96 Pac. 400; 19 L. R. A. (N. S.), 402, not to be negligence.

Issued shares in a corporation are held in Sprague versus Hsieh (Mich.), 15 Det. L. N., 847; 118 N. W., 497; 19 L. R. A. (N. S.), 874, to be goods within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and oral contracts for their sale which do not comply with the terms of that statute are held to be invalid.
