The construction of hard-surfaced roads that will enable the farmer to reach the Columbia River with his grain and other products will give the producers of Eastern Oregon the full benefit of water competition in marketing their products and will ultimately bring about a reduction of excessive freight rates that are now in effect over the various branch railroad lines on which the farmer is now dependent for transportation.

The fact that the United States is at war with a foreign foe only furnishes an additional argument in support of the good roads bond bill. Improved and serviceable highways are a military necessity in time of war. In their present condition, even the main trunk roads in this state are entirely inadequate to meet the situation should the Pacific Coast ever be attacked by unfriendly forces. Good roads are not only desirable in time of peace but are positively indispensable when the country is in a state of war.

Commenting on the selection of Herbert Nunn as State Highway Engineer, R. B. Murdock, roadmaster for Coos County, pays the following high tribute to the qualifications of Mr. Nunn: "By executive and technical training and experience, he is easily the best qualified man in the State of Oregon, if not on the Pacific Coast, for the position which he has recently been appointed to fill. The Commission is to be complimented upon their choice and the state upon its good fortune in securing Mr. Nunn's services."

Owners of automobiles will be required to pay the increased license fee whether the road bond bill passes or not. On the other hand, if the road bonds are voted at the June election, a real start will be assured in giving to the state a system of permanent highways constructed from automobile license fees and without increasing the general tax.

The Men Behind A Bank

The most important thing about a bank is the character and ability of the men behind it: the men who direct its affairs.

The Directors of this bank are well qualified for their duties by reason of their conservative policies, sound judgment, experience, integrity and financial standing.
