Tuna fish is one of the most popular of salad materials. To make a tuna fish salad, break the fish apart into flakes, mix it lightly with chopped raw celery, add a few capers or chopped dill pickle, and a small quantity of mayonnaise dressing. Then arrange the mixture on lettuce or crisp cabbage leaves, garnish with more mayonnaise and serve at once.

What to do with all those nice green tomatoes that are on the vines, and will properly never have a chance to ripen? They need not go to waste, says the home economics department of O. S. C. They can be made into pie, fried as vegetables, pickled, or made into delicious mince meat for winter.

If you want to get your money's worth from your salad, be sure to eat your lettuce.

Electrical equipment, with the exception of the immersion type of water heater, cannot stand excessive moisture. It is also well to disconnect the appliance from the electric circuit while cleaning, as a moist cloth coming in contact with

How do you like this menu: stuffed peppers, corn on the cob, fried cucumbers, pickled beets, peaches and cream, sponge cake.

Do you know that milk and cream together, either by themselves or combined with other foods, make up about one-sixth, by weight, of all the food eaten by the average American family.

FARM POINTERS

As a general practice, fall plowing in the orchard and berry fields of Oregon is not to be recommended, as it does not fit in with a soil building or soil maintenance program, says the experiment station. A green manure crop is grown during the winter by experienced orchardists, to prevent leaching and washing of soils, and to produce bulky organic material to plow down in the spring of the year.

From the Oregon Experiment station comes a warning to orchardists of Oregon, to take care lest they import another "pest" on which to expend time, labor, and spraying materials. About 30 per cent of the long filberts from Naples are reported to be wormy, and many filberts from this section are being shipped into Oregon, so that unless steps are taken at once to prevent these filbert worms from entering this country alive, filbert growers are running a real chance of having these worms established in their groves.

A slimy pond, slough, or even stagnant water around the watering trough may be the source of an organism known as B. viscosus, which, getting on the sides of the cows and eventually finding its way into the milk pail, will cause the milk to become stringy andropy. This can be eradicated only by thorough sterilization of all utensils used in connection with the milk, and eliminating the source of the contamination, advises the Oregon Experiment station.

Finding at the Oregon Experiment station and experience on Oregon farms both show that fall sown barley will bring more pounds per acre than fall sown oats. The barley recommended by the station for fall sowing in Western Oregon is O. A. C. No. 7.

Late onion production is mounting to a 45 per cent increase over a year ago, though the total will not then reach the high mark of 1927, reports show. An 18 per cent jump in acreage caused the increase. Oregon onion shipments in 1928 totaled 669 carlots of which 519 came from the little town of Brooks in Marion county.

When You Putty Windows

To make a neater job in puttying windows, cut a small groove in your putty knife about one-half an inch from one corner. This groove rides in the corners of the wood, while the point of the blade rest on the glass. When pushed down hard the knife will not slip and a straight line of putty is insured, says the Popular Science Magazine.
